Construction underway for educational facility near Route 332 and Newtown-Yardley Exit of I-95

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61

La Salle University will open a Bucks County Center in a newly constructed, 24,000-square-foot educational facility in Newtown Township in September.

In addition to serving both undergraduate and graduate students and offering complete master's degree programs in eight disciplines in the evenings and weekends, the Bucks County Center will also provide facilities for executive training and professional development during the day.

Students will access La Salle's new Bucks County Center through Silver Lake road on the east side of the property.

The Center will be built on the Silver Lake Executive Campus, a 17 acre site owned by Pitcairn Properties, Inc., of Jenkintown, Pa. Pitcairn began construction in March and will lease the building back to La Salle. The property is located near the Newtown-Yardley exit of I-95 next to the Route 332 Newtown Bypass.

The Center, which is expected to accommodate 300 students, will concentrate on evening and weekend schedules designed especially for adult learners and the working professional. Its facilities would also be available to businesses and other organizations for use in sponsoring their own training and executive development.

La Salle plans initially to offer master's degree programs in Business, Education, Nursing, Professional Communication, Computer Information Science, Bilingual/Bicultural Studies, Religion, and Clinical-Counseling Psychology. The university also expects to offer undergraduate courses in nursing and liberal arts aimed primarily at transfer students.

La Salle has been providing courses at various sites in Bucks County since 1981, including Bucks County Community College, in Newtown, and Delaware Valley College, in Doylestown. But the new Center in Newtown would be the first Bucks site devoted exclusively to La Salle programs, according to the university's provost Joseph A. Kane, '56.

"This is an opportunity to consolidate and expand La Salle's graduate and undergraduate offerings in Bucks County," Kane said. "We intend to continue exploring ways to build upon a collaborative relationship with Bucks County Community College and other organizations in the Bucks County area."

Kane added that La Salle will stop using the facilities at Bucks County Community College at the end of the summer but will continue to cooperate in such matters as transfer students, sharing databases, and other areas where the institutions can continue to support each other.

La Salle will continue to offer its MBA program on the campus of Delaware Valley College, where hundreds of Bucks County residents have earned their MBA degree over the past eight years.

"The Bucks Center is a direct result of our growing role as a regional university," said Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68. "In recent years, we've encountered a growing number of student prospects who sincerely appreciate the quality of La Salle's academic tradition. But they've told us they want this kind of educational quality close to home and in time slots sensitive to the demands of their busy schedules. We envision that many of our Bucks students will be juggling the priorities of family and work with an earnest desire to improve their credentials. We've listened to their concerns, and the Center is part of our response."

The Center is also part of a university strategic plan that is intended to make La Salle more accessible to students both in Bucks County and at its main campus in northwest Philadelphia.

Raymond Ricci, '67, the university's vice president for enrollment services, said that between 400 and 500 students are initially expected to attend classes at the new Bucks County facility which has been designed with provisions for expansion in the future. "It virtually could double in size," added Ricci. "It's perfectly conceivable that in time we could see upwards of 750 to 1,000 part-time students attending in the evenings and on Saturdays.

Most of La Salle's 5,200 students attend classes on the main campus at 20th st. and Olney ave., in northwest Philadelphia. Academic programs include day and evening undergraduate courses as well as evening and weekend courses for adult learners and nine graduate-level programs. Courses are also offered at Archbishop Ryan High School, in northeast Philadelphia.

In 1946, La Salle became the first university in Pennsylvania to offer a complete bachelor's degree program in the evening. Its School of Business Administration is one of only 20 percent of the nation's business programs to be accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB).

Graduate Degree Program in Health Care Administration Now Offered in Bucks County

La Salle University began offering an MBA in Health Care Administration at Delaware Valley College, in Doylestown, in January, according to Dr. Anne M. Walsh, director of the Health Care Administration specialization in the MBA Program. This program has been available on La Salle's main campus since 1980.

"This Health Care Administration program is for professionals in health care who want expanded professional credentials," Walsh said. Graduates of the program have gone on to excel in such areas as acute care, medical group management and long-term care. They hold such positions as vice-president for U.S. Healthcare and president of Philadelphia's Presbyterian Medical Center.

"We believe that our MBA offers excellent credentials for health professionals who want to prepare themselves for the many changes which are occurring in the health care industry," Walsh said. "Consequently, we offer courses in business administration as well as specialized courses in health care administration which focus on topics such as long term care, medical group management, and managed care. Our objective is to educate health care managers who understand not only the business complexities of the industry, but who also understand the social and ethical dimensions involved in the delivery of health care."

Walsh noted that La Salle has provided the specialization for 16 years and hence has a "tradition" in the profession. The university has also been diligent in keeping pace with changes in the health care industry, and full-time faculty are involved in organizations such as the American College of Health Executives and the Health Financial Management Association.

Adjunct faculty who teach in the program are also employed on a full-time basis and hold positions such as the president of the Presbyterian Foundation; vice president, Taylor Hospital, and the legal counsel for Franciscan Health Systems.

"We're really trying to teach on the basis of real life experiences," said Bill Morsell, '81 MBA, vice president for U.S. Healthcare, who is an adjunct professor in the program teaching a course on managed care. "We use books in the program, but as much as 80 percent of what we do is to study how problems get solved and how strategic planning is carried out." An example of studies in "real life" are reviews of health insurance negotiations that are actually carried out between payers and providers.

Football Returns after 56-Year Absence

Division I-AA Gridiron Debut set for September. Women's Lacrosse to begin play next Spring

Football was last played on La Salle's campus between 1936 and 1941. The Explorers' first two coaches were hired upon the recommendation of the legendary Knute Rockne.

La Salle University is reinstating football and adding women's lacrosse to its athletic program.

The Explorers will play Division 1-AA non-scholarship football beginning in the Fall, according to La Salle's athletic director Robert Mullen. Home games will be held at McCarthy Stadium on La Salle's main campus. The 8,000 seat facility is currently used for men's and women's intercollegiate soccer and track and field. It will be renovated with new locker rooms and a press box.

The announcement came in January, several weeks after the university introduced the La Salle Mission Grant—a $3,500 annual tuition discount to Philadelphia residents or graduates of high schools in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia. The discounts will be available beginning Fall 1997 for qualified individuals who enroll as full-time day undergraduates at La Salle for the first time.

These moves are designed to stimulate enrollment at the university. Adding football is also seen as enhancing student life on the campus, according to Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68.

"However, while there are doubtless campus life and school spirit dividends for adding football," explained Brother Burke, "this recommendation was accepted by University Council largely because of the additional full-time students it is expected to attract. There is still sufficient time to positively affect the size of this year's applicant pool, particularly in the university's primary market where there is still strong name recognition."

La Salle discontinued varsity football in 1941 because of the onset of World War II and resulting declining enrollment. The school sponsored a club football team in 1967 and 1968. Discussions for reviving football as a non-scholarship program began in 1992 when the University Council reviewed a recommendation from La Salle's Athletic Committee. At that time the proposal was rejected. However, the idea was revived recently because further studies by the university indicated the move would play "a significant role" with regard to improving enrollment and student life, Mullen said.

"This program is a natural for our area," explained Mullen. "Would a prospective college football player rather go to a Division III school and pay the same or more tuition or would he rather have his name attached to a Division I school—even though it's the same level program."

La Salle has formally applied for affiliate football membership in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference, whose members include Georgetown, Duquesne, St. John's, Canisius, Iona, St. Peter's, Fairfield, Marist and Siena. A tentative schedule for Fall 1997 includes home games with Fairfield, Delaware Valley, The Catholic University of America, Central Connecticut State, and St. Francis.

The Explorers held full membership in the Metro Atlantic Conference from 1983 until 1992. The new women's lacrosse team will begin competition as a club sport this spring and will be a scholarship sport in the spring of 1998.

"Significant numbers of students have their enrollment decisions influenced by their desire to participate in athletics at the college level," said Christopher Lydon, La Salle's director of admission and financial aid. "La Salle is often eliminated from consideration because of the absence of football for men and lacrosse for women."

Regarding the Mission Grant program, the university has become increasingly aware that families of average and modest means consider that the cost of a private education at La Salle is growing beyond their reach.

"It is this kind of family and student that La Salle was founded to serve," said Raymond Ricci, '67, vice-president for enrollment. "The La Salle Mission Grant hopefully will encourage them to take a second look at La Salle."

The two new sports, the Mission Grant program, and the proposed expansion of Hayman Hall are among a series of moves made recently by La Salle to improve its attractiveness in a "highly competitive marketplace," Ricci said.

"I think there's been, at least in the initial stages, very strong interest in football," explained Ricci, who estimates that 35 additional students who would not have come otherwise will enroll this year because of the new sport. "Longer term, we would expect to see somewhere in the area of 60 to 80 new students a year because of football. If you look at the analysis that was done, it makes good financial sense to do it. There will be costs initially to get the program up and running. And there will be costs to maintain the program. But if our projections are correct, we think it's going to be successful."

La Salle's men's and women's varsity athletic teams began competing in the highly-regarded Atlantic 10 Conference two years ago. In its first season, Explorer athletes finished sixth out of the 12 conference schools in Commissioner's Cup standings. The Commissioner's Cup competition takes into account overall standings of each school's teams in 17 sports.

Bill Manlove, Winner of Two National Championships, Named Football Coach

Bill Manlove, one of the winningest coaches in the history of NCAA Division III football, has been named head coach of the Explorers' new Division I-AA non-scholarship football team.

"I can hardly wait to get started," Manlove said before being introduced at a news conference on Feb. 25. "It isn't often that you have a chance to put your mark on a brand new program, particularly one in which there seems to be so much enthusiasm at La Salle for beginning a quality program."

Manlove, who lives in Doylestown, Pa., compiled a record of 192-82-1 during a 27-year coaching career at Widener University and Delaware Valley College. His Widener teams won two NCAA Division III national championships (1977 and 1981). His teams received seven Division III playoff invitations and won 10 Middle Atlantic Conference titles. He enjoyed 21 consecutive winning seasons and four unbeaten regular seasons.

"We're extremely fortunate to have a person with Bill Manlove's integrity and reputation," said athletic director Bob Mullen. "He brings instant local and national recognition to our new program. We needed somebody who doesn't have to explain who he is when he calls up a high school coach. He's an administrator and a teacher as well as a coach. He's a class act. There isn't a person I think in this world who doesn't like Bill Manlove."

La Salle's Faculty Athletic Committee reviewed more than 100 applicants for the head coaching position before narrowing the list to eight, then four applicants.

"I would have taken any of the eight and I would have been tickled to death with any of the four," Mullen said. "The committee was unanimous for Bill Manlove. They made a tremendous choice."

Manlove, a past president of the American Football Coaches Association, said that he knows starting a program will be a real challenge.

"I plan to bring La Salle a program that's fun, innovative," Manlove explained. "A quality program has the potential to have a major impact on the quality of campus life and I intend to develop a program that will provide excitement and become the thing to do on a Saturday afternoon."

Manlove, who has twice been named the ABC-TV/Chevrolet Division III Coach of the Year (1977-81), envisions attracting several different kinds of players to La Salle.

"You have the kind of player whose high school coach thought he was capable of competing for a scholarship, but didn't get one," he said. "You have the kind of individual who earned a scholarship but isn't getting much playing time at his current school. And finally you have situations where you get a walk-on with uncertain potential and a dream of being able to compete successfully at the college level. Given the right chance, such a player might excel beyond everyone's expectations."

La Salle's new coach said that he has traditionally had the best experience recruiting locally, about an hour from home, and added that he will be taking a close look at Philadelphia's Catholic, Public, and Inter-Ac Leagues, the suburbs, and the South Jersey area as well as at transfer students.

"That doesn't mean that we won't take a good player from wherever," Manlove explained. "We'll go as far as we have to with whatever time we have. But I think usually you do your best in your own backyard. I'm sure that the Catholic League will be a big recruiting spot for us. There are still some players out there who can help us. The big question will be if we can still get them into school and get their financial aid squared away."

Manlove earned bachelor's and master's degrees at Temple University. He and his wife, Edna, have three daughters and eight grandchildren.

Brief Glory on the Gridiron

La Salle played intercollegiate football for an 11 year period from 1931 until the sport was discontinued in 1941 at the outset of World War II. The Explorers, who picked up that nickname sometime during the 1930s, won a total of 49 games, lost 32, and tied 8 against varsity competition.

La Salle's best season was in 1934 when coach Marty Brill guided the Explorers to an unbeaten 7-0-1 record including victories over Villanova (13-6) and St. Joseph's (7-0). The only blemish on that record was a 6-6 tie with Catholic University in the second game of the season.

When La Salle announced plans for football in 1931, the legendary Knute Rockne recommended two of his star players at Notre Dame, Tom Conley and Brill, for the Explorers coaching job. Both were hired—Conley as the head coach and Brill as backfield coach. Two years later, Brill moved up to the top job and hired a young Villanova graduate, the late Jim Henry, as his line coach.

Henry would go on to a 35 year-career as La Salle's athletic director and professor in the Finance Department. He also was head coach of La Salle's last two football teams. Brill left after his 1939 squad finished with the second best record (6-1-1). Its only loss was to La Salle's Brother President E. Anselm, F.S.C., makes symbolic kickoff before the Explorers christened their new home field, McCarthy Stadium, with a 47-12 victory over St. Mary's College (Minnesota) on Nov. 1, 1936. Holding the ball is captain Joe Sciaretta. La Salle had previously played its home games at the old Baker Bowl at Broad st. and Lehigh ave., in Philadelphia.

Scranton (12-7) and the tie came against Niagara (0-0).

La Salle produced a number of Little All Americas during that period including quarterback Joe Sciaretta (1936), tackle George Somers (1938), tackle Frank Loughney (1939), tackle Dim Montero, end Johnny Pilconis, and halfback Paul Prettyman (1940), tackle Frank Thorik and halfback Bill Bynon (1941).

In March, 1942, La Salle's Athletic Council "cancelled the football schedule for the coming season and announced that the gridiron sport would be dropped for at least the duration of the war. Athletic emphasis will be switched to basketball in an attempt to boost the Explorer cage teams to national prominence," the council announced in a prepared statement.

La Salle sponsored a Club football team in 1967 and 1968 with the team compiling a 2-11-0 record over the two year period. The Explorers beat St. Francis (N.Y.), 20-0, in their 1967 opener and edged Fairfield, 12-6, in the next-to-the-last game of the 1968 season.

Agenda For The Future

A Strategic Plan for La Salle University

LA SALLE UNIVERSITY

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
PHILADELPHIA, PA 19141 • (215) 951-1010 • FAX (215) 951-1783

To the University Community:

The enclosed draft of a strategic plan identifies a list of the critical priorities for the University for the next five years. The process which produced this draft began in 1994.

From the outset, I wanted a planning process that was characterized by two important features:

- It should be as inclusive and open as possible.
- It should integrate the on-going work of various ad hoc task forces and standing University committees.

With that in mind, I asked the coordinator of planning (Greg Bruce, dean of the School of Business Administration) to meet with staff from all of the major administrative units of the University as well as with faculty and alumni. Over the following months, as the work of various task forces ended (Task Forces on Instructional Technology, Development, Community, and the Middle States Self-Study) their recommendations were incorporated into the thinking behind this draft. Simultaneously, I charged a newly formed group, the Strategic Analysis and Assessment Task Force, " to identify and assess the effects of those critical forces and factors external and internal to the University that can be expected to have significant impact on the University during the next five years."

In advance of that group's findings, a working draft of a strategic plan was drawn so that many of the issues which faced us over the last two years could be addressed in a cohesive and organized way. That working draft changed many times and eventually included the four key elements that you see here: a core belief, an expression of a vision to guide decision making, a reaffirmation of values, and, finally, strategies and goals for the future.

Over the last year, the Analysis and Assessment Task Force studied the recommendations of the Middle States Committees and examined a number of external factors which it felt could affect the University in the near future. In the spring, they concluded their work and delivered a report to me with the observation that "the strategic goals listed in the Draft Strategic Plan are appropriate as listed and we should neither add to them nor delete from them." Subsequently, the President's Cabinet forwarded the draft to University Council which endorsed the draft at its 1996 summer workshop. It further recommended that the formal planning structure be broadened to include the following elements:

- The President's Cabinet (a subgroup of University Council)
- The Planning and Budgeting Advisory Committee
- The Task Force on Revenue Enhancement and Cost Containment
- The Faculty Affairs Planning Committee

I have accepted that recommendation. All of these groups will report through University Council to me and ultimately to the Planning Committee of the Board of Trustees.

In addition to this document, formal plans have been developed for each of the major trunks of the University—Academic and Student Affairs, Enrollment Services, Business Affairs, and Development. Those documents contain specific goals and initiatives aimed at priorities for each respective area. The challenge, an on-going one to be sure, will be to assure ourselves that these plans are integrated and informed by the strategic goals of the University.

I invite you now to share your reactions to this draft so that we may bring the plan to completion. I also want to take this opportunity to thank all of the many members of the community who participated in this important work.

The University's Mission

La Salle University, dedicated in the traditions of the Christian Brothers to excellence in teaching and to concern for both ultimate values and for the individual values of its students, is a private university committed to providing a liberal education of both general and specialized studies.

As a university, La Salle strives to offer, through effective teaching, quality education founded on the idea that one's intellectual and spiritual development go hand in hand, complementing and fulfilling each other. The University has, as its basic purpose, the free search for truth by teaching its students the basic skills, knowledge, and values that they will need for a life of human dignity. The programs of the University also aim at preparing students for informed service and progressive leadership in their communities and for fulfilling the immediate and final goals of their lives.

As a Christian Brothers University, La Salle continues in the traditions of the innovative educator, St. John Baptiste de La Salle, who founded the order. The University engages in programs in which students' personal, social, and religious values may take root and in which students may grow in mature attitudes and behavior in all human relationships. The University strives to foster an environment of faith which produces a reciprocal respect among all persons in the community and to establish an atmosphere in which community members may openly bear witness to their convictions on world peace and social justice.

As a private University, La Salle strives to determine its own policies, thus providing the option of private higher education in an area increasingly dominated by large public institutions.

As an undergraduate institution, La Salle is committed to a liberal arts education which assists students in liberating themselves from narrow interests, prejudices, and perspectives, and in learning to observe reality with precision, to judge events and opinions critically and independently, to think logically, to communicate effectively, and to sharpen aesthetic perception. Students are encouraged to seek wisdom; that is, to grasp those basic principles which give order to particular facts. The University urges students to confront the ultimate questions of human experience: Who am I? Where does my destiny lie? How am I to reach it?

As a graduate institution, La Salle strives to support the career aspirations of students and meet the needs of society. Graduate education at La Salle emphasizes the students' ability to apply universals and specifics to actual situations, to distinguish relationships, to analyze critically, to rearrange component ideas into new wholes, and to make judgments based on external criteria.

CORE BELIEF

Dedication to teaching and the concept of association are at the heart of the 300 year tradition of the Christian Brothers. For a school to be truly Lasallian, it must be animated by these two elements. The concept—"to work together and by association"—has been a characteristic of the University's governance style in the past and we intend it to be in the future. Dedication to teaching will continue to be the informing spirit of the University.

Through the shared mission of the Christian Brothers, we are a community passionately engaged in the process of transforming ourselves and others through the service of education.

VISION STATEMENT

La Salle's vision of the future is inextricably linked to our identity as a Catholic, Christian Brothers institution and by the belief that inclusion and association should be the cornerstone on which our future is built.

La Salle's future will be distinguished by our continued service to, and partnership with, the City of Philadelphia. Our urban campus will serve as a unique setting for learning, service, and building community.

We will increasingly develop the University as a quality regional institution attracting students from a mainly Catholic population in the Middle-Atlantic states. At the same time, we will create awareness in selected national and international areas. Our intention is to achieve capacity among our day student body while taking steps to expand our graduate and part-time undergraduate programs.

Capitalizing on our heritage as an urban institution and mindful of the traditions of the founding order, La Salle will provide a liberal arts education with professional specializations in undergraduate and, increasingly, graduate studies.

At all levels, we will be student-centered; that is, unfailing attention to the needs of the individual student will be the recognized hallmark of a La Salle University education.

LASALLIAN VALUES

The following Lasallian values will provide a context for the operations of the University.

Respect for the Dignity of the Individual

We view the student as the center of all that the University does. Furthermore, we recognize that each person is created by God and each deserves to be treated with dignity and respect. Faculty, administrators, and staff, therefore, dedicate themselves to providing a personalized education, respecting in all cases the varying backgrounds and individual needs and abilities of each student.

Teaching and Learning in Community

We see teaching and learning as a "corporate and communal exercise." Around these core activities, we seek to develop a deep sense of association and community, where students are regarded as persons-in-community, where they can discover their unique personal value in an atmosphere where mind speaks to mind and heart to heart and where teaching and learning is experienced among friends.

Balancing The Goals of Liberal Education and Professional Studies

La Salle desires to balance the goals of liberal education with those of professional preparation. It wants to expose students to those ideas which will help them to live a fully human and principled life. At the same time, it will address the career-oriented expectations of its students by giving them the opportunity for specialized study.

Concern for Societal Issues

La Salle prepares students for progressive leadership in their communities and strives to develop in them sensitivity for the dominant ethical issues that confront society. We want to develop in our students sensitivity to the needs of others, particularly the poor, through course work and service opportunities sponsored by and for students.

Strategic Goals and Objectives

The critical areas of attention which the University will address over the next five years are expressed below as strategic goals.

1. We reaffirm our Catholic identity and recommit ourselves to making the traditional values of the Christian Brothers evident to the members of this community.

Objectives

- Support and encourage dialogue on the Catholic identity of La Salle University within the value system of the Christian Brothers.
- Develop more formal or concrete structures to transmit and celebrate the heritage of the Christian Brothers and the core concept of "shared mission."
- Urge the Christian Brothers to continue to prepare younger members for work at La Salle by promoting higher education as an important and honored way to carry out one's work and by encouraging doctoral studies and other terminal degrees.

2. We intend to cultivate a campus environment that promotes a sense of community among students, faculty, and staff.

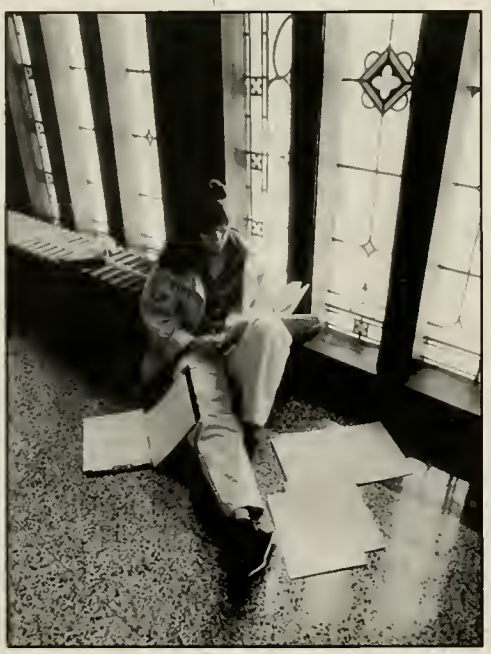
Objectives

- Establish a Presidential task force on community.
- Assist all new students in integrating themselves into the academic and social life of the University.
- Develop programs and activities to foster student spirit and morale.
- Foster the understanding that learning encompasses more than just the academic experience.
- Increase the involvement of students in weekend activities through more programming on-and-off campus of appeal to students.
- Increase the sense of safety and security on campus.
- Continue efforts to create a unified campus through the closing of 20th Street.
- Develop a calendar of annual programs and events, such as Charter Week, that enhance the spirit and cohesion of the campus.
- Examine the role athletics plays in the life of the La Salle community.
- Expand Hayman Hall to accommodate large campus-wide events such as convocations, concerts, major speakers, and basketball.
- Foster a climate of tolerance and civility and facilitate the transition into the community by developing an orientation for new faculty, staff, and members of the Board of Trustees. Central to this orientation is the understanding and acceptance of La Salle's mission and its values.

3. We will strengthen relationships with our Northwest Philadelphia neighbors and the larger community as part of our historical commitment to the local community.

Objectives

- Expand and promote collaborations with the community to improve the quality of life in the La Salle environment.
- Provide service and learning opportunities in the local community for faculty, staff, and students to develop mutual understanding and appreciation.
- Insure that all La Salle departments involved with the community integrate their strategies and plans around the core university strategy and plans.



- Improve the level of understanding (internally and externally) of La Salle's commitment to the surrounding community.

4. We will develop plans for expanding graduate programs at satellite campus locations.

Objectives

- Investigate both the short and long range implication of off-campus centers.
- Investigate the option of acquiring or leasing space in Bucks County for the development of a Graduate Center.
- Examine opportunities for growth in existing and new graduate programs.

5. We will focus our attention on our core strength— teaching and learning—while balancing liberal learning goals with opportunities for professional preparation.

Objectives

- Initiate a process to revise the core curriculum.
- Take steps to identify learning goals and regularly assess progress toward the achievement of those goals.
- Develop new programs based on the core strengths of the University.
- Develop plans for the renovation of the Holroyd Science Center.
- Support, encourage and develop the Teaching and Learning Center and the IAMST.

6. We will commit ourselves to a budgeting and planning process that will result in achieving financial equilibrium and creating an administrative environment of continuous improvement.

Objectives

- Develop a financial aid strategy that maximizes net tuition revenue and makes institutionally-funded financial aid more enrollment efficient.
- Determine appropriate size of the University with regard to students, faculty, staff and plant with a view toward achieving financial equilibrium.
- Evaluate academic and administrative restructuring to improve service, student satisfaction, and operating efficiency/economy.
- Utilize the work of benchmarking and other techniques as well as technology to improve performance and create competitive advantages through redesign of processes.
- Establish a process to better link planning, resource-allocation, and cost-containment.
- Evaluate budget and performance incentives in order to encourage conservative, effective, and creative management of resources by all members of the community.
- Commit to a management process which continues a collegial approach to governance, affirms the concept of continuous improvement, and implements a system that regularly measures progress and performance.
- Assess outcomes to determine the effectiveness of our student-centered processes and programs.
- Maintain fund-raising goals, priorities and strategies in light of the University's present financial need and position. As part of this effort, develop a University strategy for the pursuit of foundation grants and reexamine the goals of the Capital Campaign.
- Maintain an endowment investment and spending policy appropriately balanced between the short and long term needs of the University.
- Provide resources necessary to maintain a functional and attractive physical plant appropriate in size, configuration, and location.

7. We will advance our technological capabilities to support educational initiatives and administrative support systems of the University.

Objectives

- Explore opportunities in distance learning and other emerging technologies.
- Integrate technology into the teaching, research and administrative processes of the institution by investing in a technological infrastructure that is appropriate to the work of the University.
- Maintain one computing network infrastructure that serves all members of the La Salle community.
- Evaluate present University processes to identify ways in which technology can be used to improve service and productivity.
- Maintain an advisory group for the Director of Information Technology Services.

8. We will vigorously pursue efforts that lead to the development of a diverse community that is global in perspective.

Objectives

- Expand programming to increase cross-cultural understanding.
- Develop steps that will lead to greater tolerance and understanding of all members of the La Salle community.
- Become more international in focus.

9. We will provide for the continuing professional training and development of faculty and staff.

Objectives

- Implement the Middle States Self-Study recommendations as appropriate with regard to faculty and staff development.

10. We will increase the involvement of a key constituency, La Salle alumni/ae, in the life of the campus.

Objectives

- Recruit an increasing number of alumni/ae to take an active role in placement, development, academic and recruitment programs, and events.
- Through advisory boards, utilize alumni/ae in the development and execution of plans.

A Wonderfully Warm, Cordial Place

Tom McCarthy looks back on his 45 year career as a psychology professor and administrator as La Salle grew from a small commuter college for men to a major comprehensive university

Dr. McCarthy is congratulated by Dr. David J. Falcone, chairman of the Psychology Department, after receiving a La Salle University chair at a recent reception. Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, watches.

As told to Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61

Dr. Thomas N. McCarthy, recently retired from La Salle after almost 45 years as a psychology professor, director of the Counseling Center, and vice president for student affairs. He arrived on campus in October, 1952, fresh out of The Catholic University of America where he earned bachelor's and master's degrees. (He would later get his Ph.D. at the University of Ottawa.) He expected to stay at La Salle only temporarily as an emergency faculty replacement because he was awaiting security clearance after having recently been appointed to the Paris office of the Central Intelligence Agency where he was scheduled to interview operatives from behind the Iron Curtain.

We both understood it was temporary because I had another job to go to. But when I got here and liked it, I just stayed and never looked back. But I've often wondered what might have been, especially when my roommate later became attache to Moscow.

I always felt that I belonged here right from day one. It was just a wonderfully, warm, cordial place to be. The faculty, staff, and students were grand people to work with. The student body was small. As a faculty, we knew each other very well and socialized and partied together.

Going back to the early days I was impressed with the quality of our students. Even though many were outstanding academically, they were not applying for prestigious graduate scholarships and fellowships like the National Science Foundation, Fulbrights, Wilsons and Danforths. That puzzled me because I thought that they were capable of competing successfully. Brother Robert, the dean, gave me permission to set up a committee and we developed a program to identify people who could clearly compete successfully. We soon had our first Wilson and Fulbright winner, Bernie Blumenthal, '59 (currently the chairman of the university's Department of Foreign Languages and Literature), who studied at Northwestern and in Germany—and that was tremendously satisfying to me.

Early on I saw a pattern of prejudice against La Salle because our students were not being called to interviews. We protested and the Wilson Foundation people agreed to examine credentials of some of our students who had been overlooked. Their representative insisted that there was really no prejudice, but admitted that 'most of us have the view that Catholic colleges like La Salle don't really offer strong liberal Arts programs. They are particularly strong in the sciences but we're interested in the liberal arts.'

Fortunately we had a lot of Liberal Arts graduates to showcase. And then he acknowledged that 'you know, you do have an unusually strong record.' That was rewarding because, as a result, so many of our students did go on to win more of these prestigious awards than other local colleges and especially more than our traditional competitors.

When I came here, the summer Pre-College Counseling Program was just for our students. We did a series of studies comparing people who were doing well in their freshman and sophomore years with those who had not and we found evidence that parental support seemed to be a critical factor in whether or not a student stayed or withdrew. Based on that, College Council accepted my recommendation that parents be invited. We were losing 13 to 15% of our new students between their freshman and sophomore years. That first year we invited parents to the program our freshman drop out—rate decreased to 7%. Afterwards it fluctuated between 3 and 5 %.

In the early '70s after I became vice president, one of my more satisfying moments was working to make us a more residential college. There was strong opposition to that at the time. We had been a good commuter school and had served the population of Philadelphia extremely well. Many people had gone on to wonderful careers after commuting to La Salle. But I felt that the Catholic population was changing quite dramatically. The size of the Catholic family in the '60s was beginning to get smaller which meant that there would be more disposable income available to send students away to school. More and more Catholics were moving out to the suburbs and sending their children to public schools. That meant that we would be competing with other schools for the same students. and then there was a growing body of evidence showing that students who had the opportunity to live on the campus generally get more immersed in the life of the place. Of course there are exceptions but it was usually a better educational, social, and personal experience for them.

I just kept presenting position papers to College Council and the university trustees asking them to make that commitment. Eventually they did and we obtained a $6 million federal loan. But initially, several trustees were really opposed to this concept. But going residential was a wise decision. It changed the quality of campus life tremendously.

I think, too, with student life matters being so important these days—they always were—I would argue even harder for the institution to make an even greater financial commitment to out of classroom experiences. We need to be putting money into debating, glee clubs, choirs, a classical orchestra. During the glory years of debating we had a wonderful, nationally-acclaimed program. Those kinds of things enliven a campus and make it an appealing place for young people to be.

I've often had the dream that if I could make the decision, I would have all the freshmen—and maybe all the sophomores-taking classes on Saturday mornings. And every Saturday afternoon, there would be soccer, field hockey, cross country—you name it. The campus would just be filled with all kinds of cultural, social, and athletic activities. And the students would be here to participate.

One of the other really nice things that's happened to me was being involved in the planning of the Connelly Library and working with the construction people and architects all the way through to completion. That wonderful library has changed this institution incredibly for all of us. I also had the pleasure to serve as an administrator under four presidents who were all totally different, but remarkable individuals.

Brother Stanislaus was the first to permit Brother Vincent Grimes to set up a Student Life Office. As the dean of student life, Brother Vince was allowed to do things that were not being done at most other Catholic institutions. He was way ahead of his time. He foresaw changes that needed to be made in religious life before other people were even talking about that. He was able to convince us to establish a Psychology Department in the late '40s when psychology was still suspected in the church.

Brother Daniel Bernian strongly supported the more modern development of what eventually became the Student Affairs area. Brother Daniel was very instrumental in encouraging lay involvement. He established the administrative concept of four vice presidents—academic, business, student, and public affairs—and gave them strong support to develop their areas.

When I came here, with the exception of Joe Sprissler, the comptroller, as well as Roland Holroyd and Joe Flubacher who were already faculty legends, all the key positions were held by Christian Brothers. Daniel Bernian changed that. He made assignments more on merit rather than the religious status of the individual. Lay people who were appointed to these positions were not made to feel like second class citizens or anything of that sort. For me personally, he was just enormously supportive in what I was trying to do in the Counseling Center. He didn't always agree with me but he always heard me out.

Of the people still here today, Dr. Flubacher is just the model of what we would like an academician and a colleague to be. Probably no one I've ever encountered was so close to and respectful of his students. His whole life was—and continues even in his retirement—to be wrapped up in the students. He's a remarkable model for all of us.

Joe Sprissler was an extraordinary person. Like Joe Flubacher, there probably wasn't anybody in my time for whom La Salle was more important than La Salle was for Joe. He lived and breathed this place.

Brother Daniel Burke was strongly disposed to strengthening the institution as a liberal arts college. He was instrumental in changing the character of the college in that way. It was a pleasure to work with somebody who articulated ideas so well. He was also very supportive of my policy changes to share power with students more effectively.

Dan Burke had a remarkable influence on me. I learned how to conduct a committee and learned how to be a student of administration just by watching and working with him. He was always prepared. He had an extraordinary ability to pull things together and coordinate them. He had a lot of confidence in the people around him and that to me was important. He had a vision of this place as a good quality college and he wanted us to do everything that we could to assure quality in our educational programs, out-of-class activities, faculty, and staff. He also was remarkable for his tolerance of ideas different from his own even while setting an example of how to live a life decided by firmly-held beliefs.

When the decision was made to go coed in 1971, we spent much of our time getting women assimilated into the life of the campus—especially into the athletic program. There were some very strong, negative attitudes against women playing intercollegiate sports. I can recall one meeting of the Athletic Committee when I was emphasizing how important it was that they be treated with equity and have the proper equipment. And two members wanted to know 'What kind of jockstrap do they wear?'

During Dan Burke's time, we both wanted to make sure that women were fully incorporated into the full life of the campus. We encouraged women to stand for office and they eventually did become editors of the Collegian and things like that. With his convictions about the importance of equity issues and making sure that everybody was treated fairly, it made it much easier for me working with all the people affected by our going coed.

I was on the search committee that recommended the appointment of Brother Patrick Ellis as president. It was clear from the instructions that the trustees gave to us on the search committee that they wanted somebody who would become spokesperson for the institution with the larger community around us and who would be effective in raising funds. And so Patrick's style of the presidency was very different from the two who preceded him, the two that I worked most closely with.

Brother Pat became a widely-known and respected spokesman for La Salle. He was very successful at that. He raised our profile higher than it ever was and he was very effective at raising money. It was also under Brother Pat that we made the transition to a university.

I knew Brother Joseph Burke first when he came to us as a colleague in the Psychology Department and we worked closely together. Later, when he was department chairman, we introduced the Human Services Psychology Program and got the Pastoral Counseling Graduate Program established. By the time he became president, I no longer had an administrative job. I was just a colleague on the faculty. So I don't know what it would be like to work with him as a fellow administrator.

"Going residential was a wise decision. It changed the quality of campus life tremendously."

Joe Burke has a conception, I think, of what he wants La Salle to be. For one thing, he has the trustees playing a much more active role in expressing their views concerning the well-being and the direction of the institution than any board that I can recall.

Today's students are not fundamentally different from the ones on campus when I arrived in 1952. The students in those days were wonderful people—just really good people in a sense that you would be glad to have them in your own family. And I think's that's still true today. That's one of the things that makes La Salle really a great place to be.

Most students today come from families that are better off financially so you see many more cars on campus. More and more of their parents have been to college themselves, so they have a better understanding what it's about. Many of the students still work their way through school. Obviously there are many more women on campus and that's had an effect on many of the academic departments like Psychology and Communication that are extremely popular with women.

Another thing that's been so outstanding about the place—especially in the '50s and '60s—is the fraternal spirit that I have always attributed to the Christian Brothers. The faculty and staff know and care about one another. That's been very important to me—and I think the Brothers create that atmosphere. When you ask about the Catholicity of the place, what makes it a good place to be, I think it's their model—the fraternal way they live.

During all the years I have been here and especially for the past 30 years or so, questions about how to celebrate the Catholicity of La Salle have been a major concern to many on campus. With students, faculty, and administration drawn increasingly from diverse backgrounds, finding meaningful ways to assure the centrality of Catholicism in the ongoing life of the university has become more and more difficult. We have labored hard, and with remarkable success, to create a congenial campus for people of all religious beliefs. We work hard, as well, through an active campus ministry, regular discussions about our Catholic heritage, and by fostering corporal works of mercy—notably these days expressed in extensive volunteer activities, to maintain a lively Catholic atmosphere.

I think that symbols are essential as guides to ways people live, and these kinds of activities symbolize the La Salle of today. A year or so ago the university, imitating the business place, adopted a dress-down Friday practice. I took to wearing my academic gown on Fridays because that symbolizes what we are: an academic community, not a business. Just as important, a Catholic academic community. On a religiously diverse community such as we have become it is a daunting and unending challenge to find ways to proclaim our religious heritage. One of the reasons La Salle means so much to me is that we never stop that search.

McCarthy, who still teaches occasional graduate and undergraduate psychology courses, plans to do a lot of traveling with his wife, Ruth, and continue his extensive volunteer activities. Much of it concerns projects sponsored by Rotary International where he is a former district governor and president of District 745's Gundaker Foundation. He has been instrumental in raising funds for scholarships to send students and faculty abroad to teach in developing countries and for an international polio eradication program.

New "Mission Grants" Reaffirm La Salle's Historic Ties to City

In a move to "reaffirm deep, historic ties" to the City of Philadelphia, the university recently announced a new financial aid program for residents of Philadelphia or graduates of Catholic high schools in the five-county Archdiocese of Philadelphia.

Annual tuition grants of $3,500 will be awarded to full-time day freshmen or transfer students entering La Salle for the first time in Fall 1997.

The announcement came from Raymond Ricci, the university's vice president for enrollment services. The La Salle Mission Grant may be combined with other forms of financial assistance, provided total university aid does not exceed the cost of tuition in a given year.

Ricci said the grant is called the La Salle Mission Grant because the university's commitment to make a quality education available to students of modest means has always been a part of La Salle's mission. The grants would enable a qualifying student to attain savings of $14,000 over the life of a four-year education. La Salle's basic annual tuition for full-time students, excluding room and board, is $13,770 for 1996-97.

"The decision simply reaffirms our mission as envisioned by La Salle's founders," Ricci said. "We know that managing the cost of a college education is a chief concern for most families today. Our sincere hope is that with this La Salle Mission Grant, our university will become more affordable to the populations we were founded to serve.

"We're also hoping that the La Salle Mission Grant will persuade some families who believe private education is unaffordable to take a second look," Ricci said. "And we hope that when they take that look, they'll decide a La Salle education is within reach after all."

Reacting to news of the Mission Grant program, Philadelphia School Superintendent David W. Hornbeck called the move "a creative incentive and a valuable new tool for all of us who are encouraging Philadelphia high school graduates to pursue higher education in the city. La Salle should be recognized for this welcome initiative — one which will encourage our best high school graduates to continue their education right here in Philadelphia. The program is an important step toward making a college education affordable for Philadelphia families."

Richard V. McCarron, Jr., superintendent of schools for the Catholic Archdiocese of Philadelphia, said: "I applaud La Salle's initiative. The university deserves much praise for remaining faithful to the mission of Saint John Baptist de La Salle, the French educator who founded the Christian Brothers. That mission was to provide a quality Catholic education to those who deserve it the most." La Salle takes its name from the innovative, 17th-century teacher.

Founded in 1863, La Salle University continues to be administered by the Christian Brothers, a worldwide teaching order that today is the largest of its kind in the Catholic Church. La Salle has 5,170 students enrolled for the 1996-97 academic year — 2,750 day students, 1,070 continuing studies students (adult learners in the evening), and 1,350 graduate students.

La Salle's last two freshman classes have been the university's largest in six years.

La Salle's graduate nursing students recently wrapped up a public health service project at Philadelphia Park in Bensalem, Pa., where they screened racetrack workers for health problems. The La Salle students, who attended classes at Bucks County Community College, are (from left): Anna Maria Salamon, Helen Kelly, Mary Maurizi, Daniel Vandergast, John Paoletti, Wanda Sabir, Kathleen McLaughlin, Mary Ann Herrmann, assistant professor Nancy Tigar, Dr.PH., R.N., and Audrey Funt.

University Introduces Graduate Program in Psychology with Five Counseling Concentrations

La Salle University has begun offering a new master's program in clinical-counseling psychology with concentrations in five areas — marriage and family therapy, addictions counseling, psychological counseling, industrial psychology and organization, and pastoral counseling.

The program combines previous graduate offerings in pastoral counseling and human services psychology "and adds concentrations that are really relevant today," said Dr. John Rooney, director of La Salle's Graduate Counseling/ Psychology Program.

"We're excited about being able to offer this new degree program," Rooney said. "We see ourselves as meeting the needs of two kinds of professionals — those with a bachelor's degree and working in the field, such as in human resources or social work, and who want additional credentials; and individuals not primarily in the field now and who want to transfer into a new career."

Dr. Rooney said that La Salle's new graduate program has many advantages.

"We've been doing community outreach in our graduate program for more than 10 years and have a strong record of field placements as part of the degree process," Rooney explained, adding that La Salle has its own clinical, community-based program yielding valuable and practical field experience.

"Students give us real positive feedback about the kind of clinical program we have here," said Dr. John Smith, clinical director in the graduate program. Changes in the marketplace challenge many professionals today.

Rooney and Smith anticipate that corporate down-sizing trends may encourage human resources professionals to seek additional credentials, particularly in industrial/ organizational psychology, to better equip them to deal with today's stresses and challenges. They also believe the concentration in addictions counseling will be especially valued.

Rooney said the master's program, which requires 51 credit hours, will assist students in meeting requirements for certification in most areas of professional counseling, including marriage and family therapy. It will also provide graduate students with solid pre-doctoral preparation.

The program is offered at La Salle's main campus in Philadelphia and at the university's Bucks County Community College campus in Newtown, Pa.

New Environmental Science Major Helps Students "Make Real Difference in World"

For Dr. Henry Bart, the introduction of a major in environmental science at La Salle University last Fall is both appropriate and timely.

"Students are asking us for it," says Bart, an associate professor of geology at La Salle who is directing the new major. "Many of our students see their education as preparing them to make a real difference in the world, and they see that the world is affected by many environmental problems — contaminated soils, pollution of streams. They see that we don't yet fully understand how to solve many of these problems. We don't know everything about how pesticides and chemicals interact with the planet earth — what they do to us and to the environment. We haven't figured out the best ways to dispose of radioactive materials or what landfills do to the environment. They want to work on solutions to these challenges."

Bart says the new major, which he describes as "eclectic," will empower students with the knowledge to take on the problems, either through a policy-making or scientific/ technology-oriented career.

"We borrow from many areas of study to focus on a common area of concern," Bart explained, adding that the new major will include a variety of tracks including biology, chemistry and geology while retaining an earth science emphasis. "There is no exact uniformity for environmental science majors from school to school."

Bart has taught at La Salle for more than 20 years. His summer workshops to help public and parochial school science teachers expand their environmental backgrounds have proved popular in recent years. He also runs an annual Saturday environmental workshop for hundreds of high school students on campus.

With the La Salle University Neighborhood Nursing Staff behind her, Katherine K. Kinsey, Ph.D., R.N., displays a 1996 Archon Award, presented to the center by Sigma Theta Tau International, the honor society for the nursing profession. This year's award, which was given to 33 organizations nationally, focused on exemplary not-for-profit organizations. Previously, the honor society has recognized Dr. Jonas Salk, Dr. C. Everett Koop, Elizabeth Dole, Dr. David Hamburg, Marian Wright Edelman and Leighton Cluff, commemorating their contributions to improving the lives of persons all over the world.

Brother Miguel Campos Appointed Director of Graduate Religion

Brother Miguel Campos, F.S.C., S.T.D., former director of outreach and multicultural research for La Salle's Office for Multicultural and International Affairs, has been appointed director of graduate religion at the university.

A native of Cuba, Brother Miguel is a specialist on the professional and spiritual development of Christian educators and has conducted scores of national and international workshops on the subject. He has extensive pastoral experience in youth ministry, campus ministry, and in the training of catechists and directors of religious education.

La Salle's graduate religion program is the oldest of the university's 10 graduate-level concentrations. Its first students graduated in 1953.

Brother Miguel holds a doctoral degree in sacred theology from the Lateran Pontifical University, Rome. He has published five books on ministerial and spiritual development, each of which has been published in five languages.

Brother Miguel has co-directed graduate religious studies programs in Miami, Fla., and taught in similar programs in Newark, N.J.

While in Miami and Newark, Brother Miguel served as administrator of religious education offices in archdioceses there, developing catechist formation programs in both locales. He also initiated the Ministerial Development Center, a program that promotes lay ministry for the Archdiocese of Newark.

He recently collaborated with the Philadelphia Catholic Archdiocese in developing the Institute for Evangelization to spur Church growth in North Philadelphia.

"In this graduate program, we expect to continue serving both students who are already in professional church ministry and those contemplating that kind of life, perhaps considering a career change," Brother Miguel said.

Although the program has been very effective in meeting the needs of religious leaders until now, a review of future program priorities is now underway, added Brother Miguel. "We will take a hard look at both the needs and concerns of modern men and women and the Church as we approach the year 2000." Religious leaders, alumni, students and professors are working together to complete that assessment.

Brother Miguel said current graduate students include many African American, Hispanic and Asian students who are serving or who seek to serve in their communities. Tracks in the graduate program include theological studies, liturgical practice and pastoral studies.

Former Explorer Track Star Michael Mosley Honored for "Giving Back" to the Community

For Michael A. Mosley, '82, "giving back" to the community has remained a commitment throughout his professional life— ever since his graduation from La Salle University.

"I've been very blessed," Mosley says. "I received a lot of help along the way when I was growing up, and when you think about your good fortune, I think it's natural to want to give something back."

Mosley, an English/Communication major as an undergraduate, was honored on Jan. 30 with the Warren E. Smith, M.D., Award, presented each year to an African-American graduate of La Salle who's achieved professional success, demonstrated a commitment to university values, has made contributions to the community, and served as an outstanding example to all La Salle students.

Mosley was a Division I NCAA semifinalist in the national 100 meter run competition in 1980. He was captain of the men's track and field team for two seasons, was a member of "Black Students of La Salle" and helped to plan his college graduating class's ten-year reunion.

Mosley now operates his own insurance agency, which is affiliated with Allstate Insurance, near his home in Montgomery (Pa.) Township. He is assistant track coach at Philadelphia's West Catholic High School and sponsors two track clubs, the New Dimension Club, in Philadelphia's Logan section, and the Morris Estate Club of Mt. Airy. The latter organization was "very influential when I was growing up," he recalls.

Mosley has been a mentor to a youth for eight years through the Montgomery County Big Brothers/Big Sisters Program. "That's given me a lot of perspective," he says, explaining that the young man that he has taken under his wing hasn't had a father involved in his life, and his mother is no longer alive. "His story has helped me to especially appreciate what I've had," Mosley added while expressing appreciation for his parents, Arry and Agnes Mosley, who live in Philadelphia's West Oak Lane section.

"My 'little brother' just didn't have support from his parents," Mosley said. "It's been rewarding for me to see him progress into life as an adult. His grandfather said to me recently that he doesn't know what would have happened if it hadn't been for me. That was nice to hear."

Mosley explained that his own parents, born as African Americans in the South during the Depression, "had the kind of strength to get through circumstances tougher than I've ever known. They always had education at the forefront for my sisters and me. We went to college and had opportunities my parents never had. They've been married forever. They're a real inspiration to me." Arry Mosley is a retired foreman of a Philadelphia meat-packing concern. Agnes is a retired seamstress.

Another project of importance to Mosley is coordinating an "Adopt A School" Program for the John F. Watson Lodge 23, Prince Hall Masons, Philadelphia. Mosley is Worshipful Master of the Lodge. Through this program, the Lodge has been donating computers on a regular basis to the John B. Kelly School in Philadelphia's Germantown section. "All my schooling was in the Germantown community, and I enjoy remaining involved," Mosley says.

Mosley has fond memories of La Salle. "The first time I ever visited the campus was during a kindergarten class trip," he recalls. "I still get a special feeling whenever I drive by the campus." Highlights were his 1980 NCAA track success and receiving a gold watch at the Penn Relays. "I always appreciated the richness of the atmosphere at La Salle," Mosley said. "The teachers had a personal touch. I always felt at home, never like an outsider."

Other Mosley activities include sponsoring the Northwest (Philadelphia) Raiders Athletic Association and membership in Canaan Baptist Church, Philadelphia.

Dr. Warren E. Smith, for whom the annual award is named, in 1954 became one of the first African Americans to graduate from La Salle's pre-med program. He served as the university's psychiatrist for 15 years before retiring. He died in 1990.

New Trustees Elected

Richard S. Rueda, Esq., '62, chief executive officer of Trans Freight Systems, Inc., of Philadelphia, and Maria Tucker Cusick, '83, former president of La Salle University's Alumni Association, have been elected to the university's Board of Trustees, it was announced by Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68.

Brother Craig Franz Named President of St. Mary's College

Brother Craig Franz, F.S.C. who served as associate professor of biology at La Salle University from 1988 to 1994, was appointed president of St. Mary's College of California, beginning July 1.

Brother Franz is presently serving in the dual capacity of dean of the School of Mathematics and Science and executive assistant to the president at St. Mary's University of Minnesota.

During his tenure here, Brother Franz is remembered as a popular, well-respected teacher as well as a swimming enthusiast. Additionally, he was recipient of the Fulbright Senior Scholar award at the Mar Institute of Technology in Venezuela.

A native of Baltimore, Brother Craig entered the De La Salle Christian Brothers in 1975. He received an undergraduate degree from Drexel University, and a doctorate in zoology at the University of Rhode Island.

Sponsored by the De La Salle Christian Brothers, St. Mary's College was founded in 1863 in Moraga, Calif.

Br. John Owens Celebrates 60th Anniversary as Christian Brother

Brother John Owens, F.S.C., '41, assistant registrar at the university, celebrated his 60th anniversary in religious life on March 15. The Mass of Thanksgiving was followed by a reception and dinner on campus.

Nearly every undergraduate recognizes and respects the tall, elderly religious who, for two months each year, with a smile and encouraging words, supervises each registration procedure—checking students' appointments, answering questions, and announcing closure of various sections. Otherwise, he is busily engaged in the scheduling of classes for the forthcoming semester.

Brother John has been an administrator at La Salle for 34 years. Before joining the registrar's staff, he was dean of men from 1963 to 1967. Prior to that he spent 24 years at West Philadelphia Catholic High School for Boys as a teacher and, later, principal from 1954 to 1963.

"Time flies, especially when you're doing work you enjoy so much," he said. "My perseverance in religious life was easy for me because of the moral excellence of so many of the Brothers I came in contact with."

A native Philadelphian, Brother Owens was invested in the religious habit on December 7, 1936 at Ammendale, Md., and was perpetually professed on August 25, 1943 at Ocean City, N.J. He earned a master's degree in education at Villanova University in 1945. La Salle University conferred an honorary doctor of pedagogy degree in 1960.

"When I hear that one of the Brothers boys or girls from West or La Salle is making it big, I just light up inside," he said with a characteristic smile. "That's the sort of news that makes me feel like my life has had some purpose, some meaning.

"But I always knew it would be that way. That's why I became a Christian Brother."

Joseph L. Moran Scholarship Fund

This Spring, the university's Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures will be awarding the Joseph L. Moran, '50, Scholarship to a currently-enrolled La Salle student of Spanish whose academic record demonstrates promise in the language.

The scholarship was established in 1976 in honor of the esteemed Spanish professor who taught at La Salle from 1959 until his death in 1976. It aims to defray the cost of study abroad at a United States-accredited institution of higher learning. The scholarship has been supported through the years by donations from alumni, faculty, staff, and friends of the university.

Alumni contributions to the Joseph L. Moran Scholarship are gratefully accepted. Please contact Dr. Nicholas Angerosa (215-951-1202), Dr. Glenn Morocco (951-1209), or Dr. Barbara Trovato (951-1213).

Communication Alumni Receive "Shining Stars"

The Communication Department celebrated its 20th anniversary on Oct. 5 by presenting its first annual Shining Star Awards to four prominent graduates of the program who embody a combination of professional success and commitment to La Sallian ideals of education and service.

The recipients were: Ken Adelberger, '82, the voice of the Philadelphia Flyers for Prism-TV; Kelly Anne Burke, '93, a VISTA volunteer who does public relations and fund-raising for Highbridge Community Life Center, in New York City; Dan DeLuca, '94, a La Sallian volunteer who teaches religion and English at St. Raymond's High School, in New York City, and Eileen Matthews, '81, part-owner of Seque Way Video Productions and a former Emmy Award-winning producer at Philadelphia's WCAU-TV.

The inspiration for the awards, according to Brother Gerard Molyneaux, F.S.C., Ph.D.,'58, chairman of the Communication Department, came from the Biblical quote (Daniel 12:3): "Those who lead the many unto justice, shall shine as stars for all eternity."

Joseph Flubacher Scholarship Established in Honor of Distinguished Professor Emeritus of Economics

Dr. Joseph Flubacher is congratulated by David Poiesz, '80, after a scholarship was established in his name. Watching are Joseph R. Cairo, '59 (left), and Mark Ratkus, '65, both assistant professors of economics at the university. Poiesz is honorary chairperson of the Scholarship Committee. Cairo is chairperson, and Ratkus is a member of the committee.

For Dr. Joseph F. Flubacher, '35, professor emeritus of economics, December 5, 1996 was a memorable day.

Alumni, administrators, faculty, and students gathered at the First Union Bank in Philadelphia's Fidelity Building to honor his 60 years of loyal service to La Salle and to applaud the establishment of a scholarship in his name. The event was both a testimonial to his legendary career and a genuine show of affection for a man who has touched so many lives.

"I'm overwhelmed and at the same time embarrassed to have colleagues and fellow alumni asked to contribute in one's name," said Flubacher. "But gratitude is the overriding emotion."

The initial goal is to build a $250,000 endowment over three years whose annual income would provide a one-year, full-tuition scholarship. To date, $106,000 has been realized.

Emanating from grateful and generous alumni who have been inspired by their distinguished professor's teaching and example, the Flubacher Scholarship is to be awarded to an economics student of intellectual achievement, demonstrated financial need, and the promotion of the social and economic justice of the Papal encyclicals to which "Flubie" has been passionately committed.

David Poiesz, '80, senior vice president at Jennison Associates, New York City, and a driving force behind the scholarship, said: "This venture has the ability to renew investments in future students. It will inspire a new generation of students who can benefit the university."

In order to give all Explorers an opportunity to support the scholarship, plans are being made for an on-campus reception to honor Dr. Flubacher on May 15, 1997.

If you are interested in making a gift to the scholarship and/or attending the May 15th testimonial, please call the Development Office at (215) 951-1539 for details.

Tom Gola Unanimous Choice for All-Time National Invitation Tournament Team

Tom Gola, '55, who led La Salle to the National Invitation Tournament championship at New York's Madison Square Garden as a freshman in 1952, was a unanimous choice for the all-time NIT team selected by a media panel prior to the 1997 tourney. The other unanimous picks were DePaul's George Mikan and Kentucky's Ralph Beard. Maurice Stokes, of St. Francis, and Walt Frazier, of Southern Illinois, also were named to the team. Gola, who shared the NIT's MVP award with teammate Norm Grekin in 1952, also led the Explorers to the 1954 NCAA title. "Gola was the first of the big guards," recalled sportscaster Marty Glickman when the team was announced. "He was 6-7, but he played like a little man with grace and speed."

CURE FOR "WHINING" BECOMES AN ALUMNAE PRODUCTION

One day two years ago, Bernadette Prendergast McPherson, '83, was attempting to talk on the phone with her sister while keeping two preschoolers at bay at her home in Rutherford, N.J. Thomas, the baby, was taking a nap and Bernadette, her oldest child, was in school. She had long-ago postponed her legal career for the stay-at-home life, reasoning the world could do with one less lawyer for a little while.

McPherson's two preschoolers, Molly and David, shared two things in common—ESP for when mommy is on the phone and wintertime staticy hair. These two factors and the "Long Winter of '94" that followed led to the birth of a funny new product and an amazing adventure for her and her friends from La Salle.

Nearby was a spray bottle filled with water to keep the psychic preschoolers hair under control. While she was talking, the children swarmed into the room demanding treats, a change in channels, free tickets to Barney at Radio City, freedom from nap-time for their baby brother, and a host of other things. In that instant, McPherson grabbed the spray bottle and said, "Whine-a-Way...One spray and the Whine goes away!" Her preschoolers ran away laughing and her sister, Margo, suggested trademarking the name and marketing the product.

McPherson soon realized the mass appeal of a product like "Whine-A-Way." Whiners were everywhere—in her living room, in Washington, on Oprah, on the radio, in the newspapers. Something had to be done so she trademarked and copyrighted the name and design and started her own company to distribute the product as well as the "Anti-Whiners Survival Kit," which includes tee-shirts, mugs, bumper stickers, and baby bottles featuring the "Whine-A-Way" symbol and the slogan "NO WHINING." In less than a year, she got a purchase order from Spencer Gifts, Inc., a nationwide chain, and other small stores in New Jersey. Initial sales reports indicate that the enterprise is doing very well.

McPherson's husband, David, '83, a partner in the Secaucus (N.J.) law firm of Waters, McPherson, McNeill, serves as the support staff and chief shipping clerk of Prendergast-McPherson Co. "He never dissuaded me or made me feel as if I was shirking my real job," said Bernadette.

McPherson has also received considerable help and encouragement from her college friends at La Salle. Jane Murrain Munro, '83, operates her own promotion business, "As You Wish," in Jenkintown, Pa., and told her how to start. She is now a major supplier. Katie McGarvie Hogan, '82, a resident of San Francisco and a regional sales manager for Lamb-Weston Co., and Beth Price Gorman, '80, an executive with WaldenBooks in Ann Arbor, Mich., suggested ways of selling the product and supplied details on pricing. Daryl Llangraf, '82, a construction firm rep, and Diane Costanzo, '82, Esq., an administrative law judge for the City of New York, provided information about other women entrepreneurs.

McPherson has sent "Whine-A-Ways" to President Bill Clinton and Speaker-of-the-House Newt Gingrich. "Maybe the threat of the mutual soaking of both parties will end the whining in Washington and lead to detente," she explained. "That's a principal I learned in La Salle's fine Political Science Department." ■

Father David Hagan Receives Signum Fidei Medal

La Salle conferred its highest alumni award, the Signum Fidei Medal, on Rev. David Hagan, O.S.F.S. (center), at the association's annual awards dinner on Nov. 15. Here, Joseph H. Cloran, '61 (right), president of the Alumni Association, makes the presentation while Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, watches. The medal derives its name from the motto of the Brothers of the Christian Schools—"Sign of Faith." For more than 20 years, Father Hagan has been a counselor in North Philadelphia on gang and drug-related problems as well as a teacher, basketball coach, and mentor to many youth—including the late Hank Gathers. Some 63 La Salle seniors were inducted into the university's Alpha Epsilon Honor Society at the same event.

Alumnae Attend Financial Planning Seminar on Campus

The ALUMNAE CLUB sponsored a financial planning presentation on November 3 in the Faculty Dining Room. Preceded by a Mass and luncheon, the seminar entitled "Demystifying Your Finances" was conducted by Patricia Dunne McNamara, MBA '86, a certified financial planner with Prudential Securities. Child-sitting services, including videos, games, and a boxed lunch were also provided.

Alumni Meet in California and Arizona

Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, along with Brother Charles Gresh, F.S.C., '55, director of development, and yours truly hosted a reception on November 6 for BAY AREA ALUMNI at the University Club atop Nob Hill, in San Francisco. Attended by more than three dozen Alumni/ Alumnae and spouses, this delightful event was coordinated by Tom Kehoe, '50, and his wife Bernice. Attendees included Bill Weldon, '48 and family; Iva and Joe Graef, '50; Jack Campbell, '69; James Gallagher, '71; Michael Duffy, '73; David Livigni, '83; Anthony, '92, and Karen Mooney Del Vescovo, '90; Kaczaj Markian, '91; and Charles Chiang, '95.

The next night, November 7, Brother Charles and yours truly hosted a reception for Alums in PHOENIX, with the helpful coordination of Tom Raffaeli, '69. Also in attendance were George Harkins, '56; John Stathakis, '59; and Elizabeth Farley, '90.

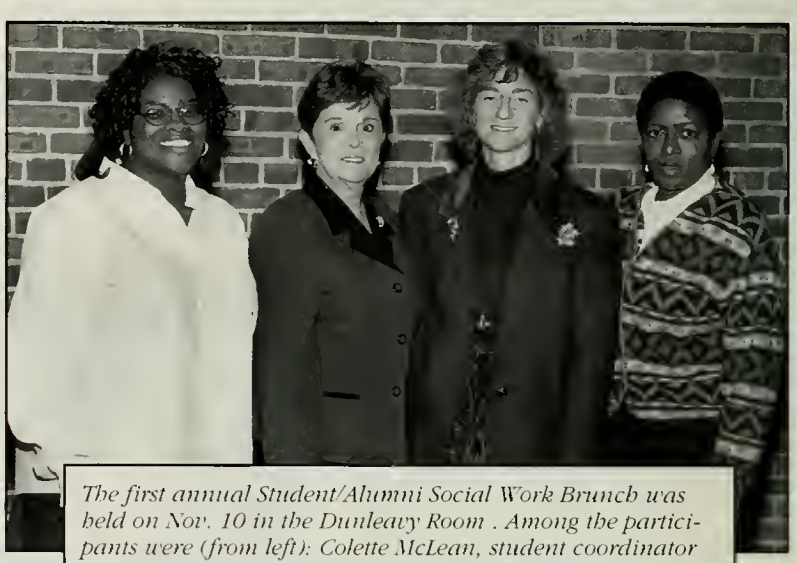
Just after Christmas, the men's basketball team participated in the Golden Bear Classic Tournament in Berkeley, Calif. La Salle graduates and fans in attendance were treated to a reception by athletic director Bob Mullen.

Explorations' Trip to Holocaust Museum in Washington a Sellout

EXPLORATIONS, the Travel Committee of the Alumni Association, hosted an all day bus trip to the Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C., on Nov. 9. The overwhelming consensus of this sold-out sojourn agreed that this was a most profound and moving outing.

Young Alumni Meet in Manayunk

On the Saturday after Thanksgiving, a YOUNG ALUMNI Reception was held at The Riverdeck Cafe, in scenic Manayunk. Some 200 of La Salle's more recent graduates enjoyed an evening of convivial socializing with their former classmates and colleagues!



The first annual Student/Alumni Social Work Brunch was held on Nov. 10 in the Dunleavy Room . Among the participants were (from left): Colette McLean, student coordinator of the Social Work Association; Dr. Sybil Montgomery, director of the Social Work program; Janine Mariscotti, '81, advisor to the student association, and Charlene Nixon, '95.

Suburban West Chapter Visits Brandywine River Museum

In the return of a perennial favorite event, the SUBURBAN WEST Chapter of the Alumni Association sponsored A Family Christmas at the BRANDYWINE RIVER MUSEUM in scenic Chadds Ford. Event Coordinator Leo Eisenstein, '55, made sure that the more than 70 graduates and their families experienced the delights of Christmas as only the Brandywine River Museum can present.

Miami Chapter Watches Women Win in Florida International Invitational

Yours truly hosted a reception for the MIAMI CHAPTER of the Alumni Association in conjunction with the women's basketball team's participation in Florida International University's Invitational Tournament Jan. 3-4. Event coordinator Bernie Mc Cormick, '58, guaranteed that a good time was had by all. Some of our southern graduates and their spouses provided a very vocal and enthusiastic boost as they watched the women of La Salle defeat the ladies of Brown and St. Mary's of California.

La Salle-St. Joe's Luncheon

The annual joint luncheon of the alumni from La Salle and St. Joseph's Universities was held at Philadelphia's Racquet Club on Feb. 28, the day before the Explorers hosted the annual men's basketball meeting between the two traditional Big Five arch-rivals.

Political Science, Economics, Criminal Justice Majors Network with Alumni

The fourth annual networking evening for political science, economics, and criminal justice majors and alumni took place in the Lawrence Conference Room on Mar. 19. Former and present faculty and alumni and current students mingled, listened to "on the job" tales and made future business connections. Once again, it was a successful event as alumni helped the next generation of La Salle graduates plan their career paths.

"They Were an Amazing Group"

The Honors Program Class of 2000 Exceeded all Expectations

When John Grady, director of the university's nationally-respected Honors Program started assembling what would be the largest class in history, he was concerned that its size —75 men and women—might somewhat compromise its traditional quality. "But it's been a real revelation," says Grady. "From day one, the chemistry of this class was outstanding. I don't remember a group that was involved in as many different things. It's just incredible how they've just gotten involved right across the campus in so many activities."

Most of these young men and women participate in a number of extra-curricular activities. Here's a sampling of some of them:

Five of the eight roles in last Fall's production of "Lend Me a Tenor" were played by these Honors Program freshmen.

"The faculty and I both noticed as the year was coming to a close that there was something very special about this group," says Grady.

"I love the Honors Program," says Karen Heistand. "The different activities they have planned for us during the Wednesday afternoon sessions accentuate what we're learning in class." This year on Wednesdays, the students saw "Madam Butterfly" at the Philadelphia Opera, the Peale Exhibit at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, and visited places like the Bryn Athen Cathedral, the Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C., and Eastern State Penitentiary. "It's a rich experience," says Heistand, "just an asset to the program."

A Candid Look at La Salle's Future

$100 MILLION or a GOOD LION TAMER

Brother Joseph Burke joins some of the university's 500 students, faculty, and staff who volunteered for a number of community projects on "Branch Out Day" in September.

By Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68

College and university presidents are occasionally confronted by questions from alumni that require a leap from the contextual restraints of reality into the unfocused realm of the abstract. My particular favorite (which will have to wait for another time on these pages) is "Brother, what would you do if someone gave you a $100 million gift?" Absent the arrival of that dream gift in the near future (Please, dear reader, prove me wrong!), it may prove more instructive for us all to consider the current state of La Salle University within the context of political, market, and budgetary realities.

In terms of political realities, the structural budgetary difficulties of the federal government (and, by extension, of state and city governments), and the ever-increasing costs of political campaigns, have created new challenges for independent institutions of higher education such as La Salle. The challenge is even more daunting for those schools that find themselves in urban settings (again, like La Salle.)

Perhaps the most simple way to state our predicaments is as follows:

Follow the Money

The structural federal deficit and debt and the growing costs of political campaigns have placed our schools in an iron vice. For a member of Congress, the first practical task is to win re-election. That task, in turn, is predicated on raising campaign funds and in satisfying the needs and desires of the electorate. Both of these tasks are measured in dollars (in the first case, campaign contributions, and in the second, government appropriations). College students and their families have never been, nor are they likely to become, organized sources of campaign funds for elected officials like, for example, the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP). This means that Congress is less likely to spend the ever-decreasing portion of discretionary Federal spending on the needs and wants of college students.

Congress is less likely to spend the ever-decreasing portion of discretionary Federal spending on the needs and wants of college students.

Don't Just Stand There, Do Something!

Because members of Congress cannot express their concerns for the higher education sector by appropriating funds, they must find other means of expressing their devotion. Thus, in place of appropriation, we have been given regulation. Whether in hiring practices, meeting the needs of the handicapped, or many other normal functions of a university that may come to mind, the federal government has given us regulations. More often than not, we need to report to or can be investigated by some entity of the federal government concerning those regulations. Less direct student aid and more regulation from the federal government have meant greater administrative costs and fewer students at our schools. And what happens at the top soon filters through to the bottom.

Monkey See, Monkey Do

The same "regulation instead of appropriation" trade-off seen on the federal level, trickles down to the state and local levels. But there are some interesting similarities between our situation and the cities that were once the great population centers of our nation. Much as financial grants were once given to our students, federal block grants were given to cities. With the disappearance of both of these forms of assistance, college costs and local tax levels have increased. The loss of federal funds for independent colleges has led to student flight to state-supported schools and an increase in private institutional aid to students (our institutional aid awarded to students has doubled in the last four years to a level of $17 million for the 1997-98 academic year). The loss of federal funds for cities has led to homeowner and business flight to the perceived greener pastures of the suburbs and increased taxation of those unwilling or unable to leave. Again, private universities such as La Salle have been hit especially hard by this phenomenon. To compensate for the continuing erosion of its tax base, the City of Philadelphia has imposed a voluntary taxation program on some non-for-profit entities called the Payment in Lieu of Tax (Pilot) Program. Those institutions that do not choose to make the "voluntary" payment have been told by the city that it will challenge their tax-exempt status in court. But this year has seen an even graver threat to private higher education in Pennsylvania.

What to do when the 800-Pound Gorilla Becomes a 1,400-Pound One?

This year, Eugene Hickock, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania's secretary of education, approved Penn State's plan to upgrade its two-year institutions of higher education to full, degree-granting four-year programs. Penn State argues that the expansion is needed because State College is bursting at the seams and everyone wants a Penn State education. Without denying the quality of which Penn State is capable and the right to provide the best possible education for its students, there are some clarifying points that need to be made concerning what Penn State already has and what it wants in the future.

The total Commonwealth Higher Education appropriation for 1997-98 is $1.560 billion. Penn State's slice of the pie is $289,716,000 (18.57%). Much of that appropriation goes towards subsidizing the tuition paid by students attending Penn State. The rationale behind this support was to make higher education affordable to those who are least able to pay. Yet there is growing anecdotal evidence that middle-and upper-middle class income families are opting for State schools such as Penn State because their sticker price (again, reflecting heavy public subsidy) is lower than ours. As more and more people with the ability to pay for education take advantage of the subsidized tuition at Penn State's new four-year campuses, three things will happen.

First, the dollars set aside at Penn State for those students without financial means (for whom the public subsidy is intended) will be diminished. Second, in order to meet the needs of those students and to meet the considerable capitalization (library, computer, physical facilities, faculty, and administrative expenses), Penn State will be forced to seek even greater budgetary support from the Commonwealth. Third, schools such as La Salle, which must bridge the gap between the public's ability to pay and the real cost of providing a quality education with its own institutional funds, will have fewer relatively well-to-do students from which to derive those aid dollars. In arguing our case, we point to the fact that the average family income is higher at Penn State than it is at La Salle. We also point to the fact that every program offered or anticipated at our closest Penn State competitor—the two-year and soon-to-be four-year Ogontz campus—is already offered at La Salle or at one of the 45 other institutions of higher learning in the Delaware Valley. How can Penn State speak of a void in a market as crowded as ours?

Instead of filling a void in higher education opportunities, Penn State's expansion plans will create one.

Danielle Campese, '97, who served as president of the Students Government Association during her senior year, presents the Senior Class Gift to Brother President Joseph Burke during the Class of 1997 Alumni Induction Ceremony on May 9. Some 100 members of the class each pledged $19.97 to the Hayman Hall renovation project.

Some independent colleges will be driven out of business and others will be forced to reduce the variety and quality of services. Under the best of circumstances, any economic benefit generated by the Penn State expansion would be more than offset by the cost of a diminished independent sector. If the independent colleges and universities closed tomorrow, the annual cost to the commonwealth budget of absorbing the independent sector's students would be $750 million. This does not include the considerable capitalization costs required by such an absorption: technology and libraries, dorm and classroom space, faculty and administration expenses. Thus, if providing affordable, quality education to the greatest number of our citizens is the main concern, it makes better budgetary sense to take advantage of the excess capacity that currently exists in the independent sector of higher education (it can accommodate all new high school graduates for the next decade) than it does to fund capital and program expansion in the Penn State system.

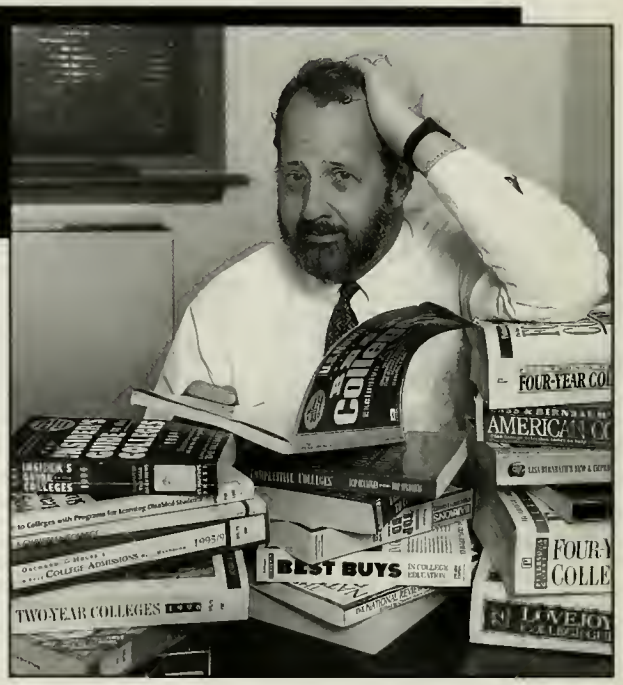
By giving a portion of that Penn State tuition subsidy to students who choose to attend independent sector schools of higher education, the commonwealth could meet the needs of Pennsylvania's current and future students for a fraction of the cost of the proposed Penn State expansion. But our Penn State colleagues argue that an independent college cannot offer the Penn State experience. This begs the question of how many students can fit onto the main campus at "Happy Valley." The more cynical among our number maintain that Penn State seeks to make its main campus into an exclusive haven for only the best undergraduate honors and foreign students, and graduate students. The average Pennsylvanian will be told to settle for a higher cost, lower quality product at one of the expanded Penn State campuses. What happens when there really is no alternative to the main campus, in terms of affordability or quality because the independent sector has been damaged beyond repair? To my mind, the quality and variety of choices now available to Pennsylvanians (and the economic impact of the many non-Pennsylvania residents who are currently brought to the state by independent sector schools) will be greatly diminished if the Penn State plan is implemented.

None among our number wishes ill for Penn State. In fact, we recognize that it is an important part of the variety of choices and strengths that is higher education in Pennsylvania. We only ask for that same recognition. For the economic and educational future of our commonwealth, that recognition must come from our elected officials sooner rather than later. It is difficult to achieve success in the political arena against a competitor which can send the corporate jet anywhere in the commonwealth to bring a legislator or executive to Happy Valley for a chat with Coach Paterno and a Nittany Lions football game. But we will keep at the job of promoting independent higher education (and by the way, our football team takes the field in September, but it will be a while before Penn State is on our schedule). My only request is that every one of our alumni and alumnae, and our other friends, keep us in mind when speaking with our elected officials in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

And if that $100 million donor is out there...not only do I work past 5 P.M. each day...I'm in most weekends as well!

Brother Burke is La Salle's 27th president and the first alumnus to hold the position. He is beginning his second five-year term.

Looking for Easy Answers



Guidebooks Seeking to Demystify and Quantify College Education Have Ignited a Multi-Million Dollar Industry. But Are They Reliable?

By John H. Kennedy

So. You're looking for a college.

You might not have to look too far. Your brother, sister, mother, father, aunt or uncle went to La Salle University, and they think you should go there too.

But there's a hitch. Two years ago, the school was ranked No. 8 among the East's regional universities; last year, it dropped to 15th. And now, it has slumped further, out of the top 15.

There it is, in black and white, stark evidence of La Salle's decline. Right?

Wrong, say La Salle administrators. The school has maintained its excellence, perhaps gotten better. Ask alums, students, professors. Visit the campus. Look at the course offerings in your major. Do the necessary research to make an informed choice.

But pay no attention to that guidebook.

"That guidebook" is U.S. News & World Report's annual rankings of colleges and universities, America's Best Colleges, perhaps the best-known entry among scores of publications seeking to demystify and quantify higher education. And hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of families are turning to the guides each year to, well, guide them.

That often complicated process of choosing a college has ignited a multi-million dollar industry and an upheaval in higher education. It also has provoked an uneasy relationship between college administrators, who feel no one knows their own institutions as they do, and guidebook publishers, who insist that they can and should pierce the mysterious veil that shrouds academia.

"Higher education is the second most expensive investment most families will make [after buying a home] and they are looking for as much help and guidance as they can get, whether they are going to spend $20,000, $40,000 or $120,000," says Alvin P. Sanoff, managing editor of America's Best Colleges.

But the kind of help families need isn't necessarily found in the U.S. News guidebook and others like it, say many college administrators.

"It's not just an almanac of information; it's a rating scheme of one kind or another," says Raymond A. Ricci, La Salle's vice president for enrollment services. "I think it's silly, to tell you the truth. You are trying to reduce all the qualities and characteristics of a school and trying to narrow down to one number. And you simply can't do it."

Adds Bruce Hunter, an educational consultant who has studied the college guidebook landscape:

"I think the trouble is the public is only too willing and anxious when they begin this college process -- whether it's kids, parents, grandparents, whatever -- to find the easy answer and let someone else do the work or research for them."

Love 'em or hate 'em, the guidebooks and their offspring will be around for awhile, offering a shortcut through the process, so long as they make money for their publishers and provide helpful information to parents and students.

But when and how did they become an essential part of the college selection process? And have they impacted La Salle's allure?

It wasn't so long ago that life on campus used to be much simpler. Admissions directors were primarily counselors, not marketing mavens hell-bent to make their numbers. Colleges and universities -- and their powerful alumni -- were the primary arbiters of information about their own special brand of higher education. And college students were merely students, not bottom-line consumers.

Then came the '60s and '70s, when higher education became a laboratory for tumultuous change. Change swept through virtually ever corner of the college campus -- academics, athletics, housing, career planning.

Suddenly, Dad and Mom's alma mater was no longer old reliable, predictable State U. And families faced financial stakes that, during the ensuing generation, got higher and higher.

"When family income stagnates, which happened from the mid-'80s for the better part of a decade, and tuition went up and up and up, the cost of college became a larger proportion of a family's household income,' says U.S. News' Sanoff.

Suddenly, students and parents demanded more information -- about majors, financial aid and job prospects after the baccalaureate. For years, they'd had access to a few of those fat, phone-book type guides, which catalogued basic data about hundreds of colleges. Then came the Underground Guide to College Campus and The Insider's Guide to the Colleges, which had a slightly subversive, impressionistic take on various colleges.

Publishers soon realized that many families sought more than just the basic data to help them navigate the long, complicated maze to a college choice. To the horror of academicians, some parents and students welcomed a third-party view about which schools were good, better, best. And bad, worse, worst.

"We rate everything else," says Tom Fischgrund, a marketing executive for Coca-Cola who also happens to be editor of Barron's Top 50: An Inside Look at America's Best Colleges."

"We rate cars, we rate cities. Why should we not rate colleges?"

Today, there are about 150 guidebooks or college research books of various stripes, says Hunter, an educational consultant in Wisconsin.

They break down into several different categories, and only a few of them actually assign numerical rankings the way U.S. News' guidebook and Money magazine's September issue do.

There are dozens of those so-called comprehensive, objective guidebooks, which provide data on hundreds of colleges and universities and have the heft of the Manhattan phone book (published by Peterson's, Princeton Review, Barron's, Cass and Birnbaum, Kaplan, the College Board, to name a few). They are the least objectionable to college adminstrators, because they mostly offer data, not judgments.

Then there are what Hunter calls narrative, subjective guidebooks (Barron's Top 50, The Fiske Guide to Colleges, for example) that go beyond the data. Also, there are "value for money" books that claim they can recommend the best buys.

In addition, dozens and dozens more guides cater to more specialized audiences, depending upon your racial, religious or personal backround or interest. (Not all of these will be available at your local book store or library.)

At least a half-dozen guides target minority students, and at least two examine Christian colleges. There's an index to Catholic schools, a guide to Jewish life on campus, even a primer for gay, lesbian and bisexual students. There are five guides for international students, nine guides for students interested in the arts, 10 for the learning disabled and 11 for student-athletes, says Hunter. Don't forget those for students interested in teaching, nursing, the environment, journalism, geoscience, architecture and tourism.

Disenchanted with the drift of liberal arts colleges and universities? Consider a conservative tack on higher education (The National Review College Guide, for example). Want to make the world a better place, or just interested in colleges with good equestrian programs? There's the Student Advantage Making a Difference College Guide and Manning's Guide to College and Secondary School Equestrian Programs, respectively.

Of course, there are a couple of guides to the guidebooks, including Hunter's own self-published work.

"There's no doubt that this is big business," Hunter says. And it's getting bigger, particularly with computer software, CD-ROM and Internet resources now available.

One product, used by 3,000 to 4,000 high schools, helps students build a list of schools through a special computer program, and ultimately click on audio and video clips from each campus. Because of their interactive component, many of the high-tech products hold a distinct advantage over the conventional guidebooks. They can become a sort of "counselor in a box," says Steven Syverson, dean of admissions and financial aid at Lawrence University in Wisconsin, who tracks the high-tech products.

During an eight-month period last year, Syverson watched the number of diskette or CD-ROM offerings grow from eight or nine to 25 or 30. "And a lot of these are tied into the published guides and web sites," he says.

A troubling companion to this burgeoning business of the college guides -- conventional and otherwise -- is the pressure on colleges and universities to produce better numbers.

The market's biggest player remains U.S. News' America's Best Colleges," which ingests a mass of data and spits out numbered rankings. While it won't release sales figures, U.S. News says it published approximately one million copies of the 1997 guidebook (priced at $5.95). A few other guides assign rankings to schools, but none with the clout of U. S. News' entry (Time and Newsweek recently entered the market with their own guides, but have eschewed rankings).

Educators complain that reducing any institution's four-year educational experience to a number is just not possible, at least to their satisfaction. Syverson compares it to assembling a group of friends and ranking each one's life, from best to worst.

"What do you mean? Happiest? Richest? Has the best family life? Sex life? What does best mean?" he says. "It's what's best for the individual."

To Ricci and Chris Lydon, La Salle's director of enrollment and financial aid who left during the summer to take the same position at Providence College, this reductionist formula yields a skewed view of any college. In La Salle's case, it has dropped from No. 8 in 1995 to a position off the chart of the top 15 schools in 1997. (In its groupings, U.S. News only provided readers with overall numerical rankings for the top 15 regional colleges and universities, and then lumped La Salle in its top tier of 37 schools, providing their rankings in individual areas.)

To satisfy their curiosity, La Salle administrators contacted U.S. News to find out whether the school had actually slipped in any of the six key areas the magazine uses to come up with a number. What they found was that its overall score had actually improved, even though its overall ranking was 20th.

The school's score in two areas -- academic reputation (based on surveys of other colleges and universities) and selectivity (acceptance rate and percent of those who enrolled) -- was unchanged.

But La Salle improved in the four other categories. Its ranking for faculty resources improved from 45th to 38th; financial resources, from 45th to 40th; retention rank, from 19th to 16th; and alumni giving, from 77th to 73th.

So, according to the material provided by U.S. News, La Salle got better, but other schools got slightly better than that.

Still, people wanted to know what went wrong.

A columnist for the student newspaper, The Collegian, averred last fall that U.S. News may have taken note of a number of troubling signs on campus, including a "rapidly degenerating record of selectivity," based on the increasing number of students admitted to the school who placed in the fourth quartile of their high school class.

The rankings did not escape the notice of alums. "It comes up on a fairly regular basis, especially after that thing comes out," said Joe Cloran, past president of the Alumni Assocation. "I believe the alumni read and react to them. I don't know whether they understand how reliable they are."

In fact, the group raised the rankings slump during one of its periodic gatherings with La Salle's president, Brother Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68.

"Nobody liked to see us drop out of the top 15," Cloran says. "I think he did a fairly good job answering it. He said, even when we were in the top 15 he cautioned people about the rankings and how they were compiled. He was saying, even when we were doing well, he was questioning the methodology."

U.S. News' Sanoff has heard all those questions -- and worse -- about America's Best Colleges. As its managing editor, he has defended the rankings in the face of student protests (Stanford University), in response to boycotts from a handful of colleges (Reed College in Oregon, for example) and over the wails of indignation from college administrators.

Despite its success, the guidebook has been dogged by controversy from its inception a decade ago, when it merely asked college presidents to recommend the nation's best schools. When U.S. News then committed to a more scientific, data-driven methodology, college administrators swallowed hard, grumbled a bit and attempted to comply.

Caught in the middle were admissions directors. Schooled to view their job as a mission to counsel students about their best college fit, they now faced intensifying pressure to achieve better and better numbers, all to look better to students, parents, alumni and the guides. As their jobs changed from the '60s to the '80s, said author Richard Moll, admissions officers were asked to "tell," then "yell," and finally "sell."

"Within the profession there is a lot of demoralized feeling, because you can see people who are good, on-top-of-it admissions people, who are not missing any tricks, but they are getting fired because the numbers just aren't right," says Syverson of Lawrence University. La Salle's Lydon says he knows 17 admissions officers around the country who lost their jobs in 1996.

"It's what I call a sports mentality," says Lydon. "The numbers aren't good; so let's change the coach."

In 1995, The Wall Street Journal reported what many in the academy had suspected for years: many schools were manipulating the data to look better in U.S. News, Money magazine, Barron's and others. "It was collegiate cheating on a nationwide basis -- and the perpetrators were colleges themselves," the newspaper would say later.

Many that weren't exactly cheating were convening strategy sessions to target specific data areas to improve on -- primarily for the sake of the guidebook rankings, and not necessarily for their students' sake.

"There are literally hundreds of colleges that are either conducting research or are more quietly massaging numbers and changing policies to look better in the U.S. News book when it comes out," says Hunter, who recommends some guidebooks but not those that rank schools.

Even La Salle got swept up in the Wall Street Journal story. The university was among at least 50 schools that the newspaper said had reported rosier data to U.S. News than they reported elsewhere. In La Salle's case, the university reported a 68 percent student graduation rate to the NCAA and a 76 percent rate to the guidebook, according to the newspaper.

To Ricci and Lydon, the discrepancy grew out of an honest confusion plaguing any school that tries to complete the mountains of forms it receives each year from guidebooks, some of which ask the same question several different ways. La Salle honestly addressed each question, but one answer included fulltime students and the other included both full- and part-time student graduation rates, says Ricci.

"If I were to sit down with our database right now, I might get different answers," he added.

National reports of cheating, manipulation and mistakes have triggered a move to establish a common set of data requests, so that all schools provide the same basic data to everyone.

At the same time, says U.S. News' Sanoff, the magazine has tightened its methods to cross-check the accuracy of data from the schools.

Each year, U.S. News refines its ranking system, using suggestions and criticisms from schools. But no matter how accurate its data, sophisticated its methodology or well-intentioned its goals, critics will always find fault with the magazine's system, Sanoff says.

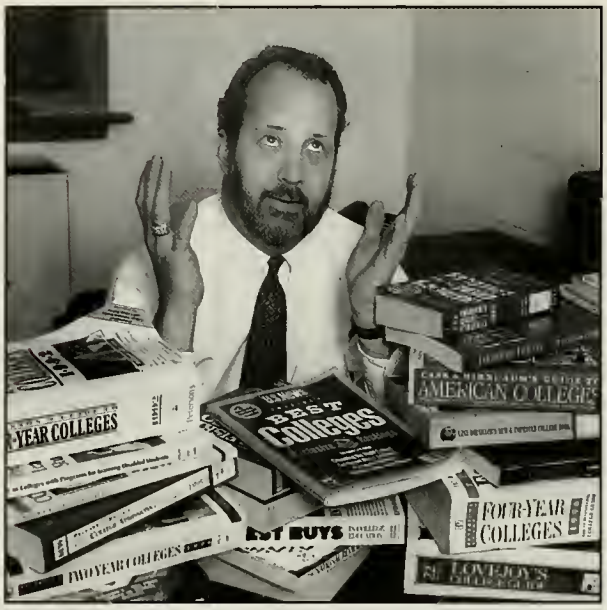
Some resent a news magazine -- and not higher education itself -- performing the evaluation. Others have just tasted sour grapes, having scored low. And some, says Sanoff, have genuine philosophical differences. Colleges and universities are so complex, so diverse, so individual, that their four-year offerings can't possibly be reduced to a number and stacked up against each other.

This spring, Stanford University began furnishing similar data on its own web site (www.stanford.edu/home/statistics) to let students and parents interpret it for themselves, rather than rely on a guidebook's analysis. In letters to other schools, Stanford has suggested they do the same.

Hunter, an admissions consultant to Ripon College in Wisconsin, counts himself among those critics who says the magazine's data can be quite helpful, but can't be translated into a numerical gauge of a college's value.

"A number of us have urged U.S. News to continue publishing the book, but simply remove the numbers (rankings) from the left-hand column," says Hunter.

That's not gonna happen. The magazine may soon alter the system, giving schools within a few decimal points of each other the same ranking. But the rankings, says Sanoff, will stay.



John Kennedy, a former legal affairs reporter for the Boston Globe, is now a lecturer in the university's Communication Department.

Sitting in his Washington D.C. office, Sanoff can't help but sigh in frustration, after patiently hearing all the complaints, suggestions and even high-minded criticism. After all, aren't people taking these guides a bit too seriously? They are just a tool, he says, not a Bible.

"There seems to be in my view a false assumption among a lot of people in higher education that families are willy-nilly marching to colleges based on our rankings," Sanoff says. "And the feedback we get and even some research we've done tells us that people use the rankings basically in either putting together a pool or in helping to winnow a pool. It's not used in a determinative way."

In fact, the administrators at 20th and Olney say they have seen no perceptible impact from the rankings. Lydon says the school got its second highest number of inquiries -- 40,000 -- for the class that will enter school this fall. The highest number of inquiries -- 52,000 -- came from the class that entered last fall, which he credits to overlapping marketing campaigns by La Salle, and not to a higher ranking in a guidebook. And the inquiries from September to January '97 ran about the same as the year before -- about 2,500 to 3,000.

Of bigger concern, says Lydon, is the 4.5 percent dip in applications this year, such a sudden drop that it can't be explained by guidebook rankings. After all, campus visits were at an all-time high. Lydon says he can only guess that the publicity about a recent skein of violent crime at Penn probably affects attitudes about other urban Philly campuses, including La Salle. Also a looming threat is the cost competition private schools encounter from public schools such as Penn State, which is increasing its presence in the Philadelphia area.

In June, however, Ricci announced that according to active confirmations, La Salle officials were now projecting a freshman class of 800 students that would far exceed that original anticipated goal of 710.

Where La Salle envisions more effective marketing opportunities -- much more so than a notch or two higher in a guidebook -- is its expanding direct-mail campaign to prospects. Last year, the school bought 130,000 names of high school students from The College Board, which administers the SATs and PSATs, and plans to nearly double that number this year, says Ricci.

Using the names, La Salle hopes to extend its recruiting net to a broader geographic area (into Florida and the Midwest, for example), and to expand its recruiting cycle to 18-24 months, which means high school students can expect to get mail from La Salle as early as their sophomore year.

That isn't to say La Salle and other schools don't exploit any marketing opportunity -- including a high ranking in a college guidebook. Remember the huge banner La Salle draped from a campus building during the summer of '94, trumpeting U.S. News' judgment that La Salle is one of the country's best? In the '94-'95 university bulletin, prospects were greeted with this prominently played passage: "How good is La Salle academically? It's one of America's leading colleges, according to U.S. News & World Report, Barron's, Peterson's, Money magazine and The New York Times."

Marketing becomes critical, particularly in Greater Philadelphia, where 84 colleges and universities, 11 of them Catholic, are competing for students, says Lydon. And guidebooks -- or their high-tech offspring -- promise to be a tool students and parents will use.

Devin Helmes, a La Salle freshman, is a case in point.

He found one of the "phone book" guidebooks to be helpful as a quick resource for basic information about a lot of schools. But Helmes, of Fairfield, Conn., took the process seriously, by consulting his high school counselor, reading up on the schools, and visiting a dozen campuses, including La Salle.

He didn't see the U.S. News guidebook until late in the game. A low ranking probably wouldn't have changed his mind, but it was nice to see La Salle ranked, he says.

"I wanted it to be in," says Helmes. "But I pretty much had my mind set on La Salle."

The Year that CC, DC, TJ, and CD Stole the Show

Exceptional individual performances as well as some outstanding team efforts in Swimming, Track, Women's Basketball, Men's Soccer, and Softball highlighted Explorers' Athletics

By Bob Vetrone, Sr.

It didn't take long—for either CC or DC.

CC, of course, is Cesidio Colasante, La Salle University soccer player extraordinaire.

DC, of course, is Donnie Carr, the Explorers' latest basketball star-of the-future.

And how about TJ and CD?

Travar Johnson, freshman shot-blocker on the men's basketball team, pulled off one of the year's major surprises when he won Rookie of the Year honors in the Atlantic 10 Conference Track championships at McCarthy Stadium.

Having not competed in track since his schoolboy days at Ridley High two years ago, Johnson, nevertheless, won the high jump with a leap of 6-8, then won a jumpoff with Ryan Fortune, of Massachusetts.

In addition, he finished sixth in both the long jump (21-3.5) and triple jump (44-9). Travar and junior Ed Morris led the Explorers to a third-place finish in the men's competition, the same spot as the La Salle women.

Morris, from Penn Charter School, was named the Most Outstanding Performer, won the long jump (23'8.25), was second in the triple jump and 100-meter dash and placed third in the 200-meter dash and javelin.

For Morris, it was just another great day in a great campaign. Earlier, at the Villanova Invitational, he checked in with four first-places and was beaten in the 200 by Andrew Valmon, a member of a gold-medal winning relay team at the Barcelona Olympics in 1992.

Months before, in the early moments of the 1996 soccer season, in the first game of his third varsity season, Cesidio Colasante wiped out two of La Salle University's outstanding soccer records.

To make it even more dramatic, the goal that gave him the two records resulted in a 3-2 victory over American University with only 28 seconds left in the second (and final) overtime.

With that goal, the sensational booter from

Cesidio Colasante, who was a member of the U.S. national soccer team last summer, became the Explorers' all-time scoring leader in 1996-97.

Hockessin, Del., surpassed the marks of two former Explorer greats. CC's 42 goals passed Jeff Van Tiem's 41 and his overall point total of 98 vaulted him ahead of Georg Montag's previous mark of 97.

By time the season had ended, Colasante had amassed 60 goals and 142 points. If he continues near that pace in his senior year, CC could break into the top 10 in Division I in career goals and points.

That's pretty heady stuff even for a player who was rated an All-American in high school and Delaware's Player of the Year in 1992. During the summer between graduation from Salesianum High and his enrollment at La Salle, CC suffered a broken foot and had to sit out his initial freshman season.

From then on, it has been one score after another, records falling here and there, and Atlantic 10, Philadelphia Soccer Seven and other honors coming to him and the Explorers.

He accelerated as the season went on and topped it off with a hat trick against Fordham in the Atlantic 10 Tournament, but the Rams eked out a 4-3 win in the semifinals.

The 12-4-2 record is the second best in school history. It earned Pat Farrell Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year honors and placed Colasante on the first team and Erik Cline and goalie Dan Devery on the second team. Seniors Matt Comey and Dan Stout made Philadelphia Soccer Seven's first team, along with Cline and Player of the Year Colasante.

The women's basketball team posted another outstanding record: 21-7. Led by Chrissie Donahue, who finished her career as the program's second leading scorer of all time (1,818 to Jenn Cole's 1875), John Miller's senior-oriented team finished second in the Atlantic 10 West, defeated Virginia Tech in the first round of the post-season tournament, then bowed to Big 5 rival St. Joseph's in the semifinals.

Pat Farrell (men's soccer) and Ray Perri (softball) were selected Atlantic 10 Conference Coach of the Year in their respective sports.

Donahue earned first team honors from the Atlantic 10 and the Philadelphia Big 5. Junior and tri-captain elect Sarah Haynes was voted the MVP in the La Salle-hosted CoreStates Classic and was second team A-10 and Philadelphia Big 5.

The loss of seven seniors, including the much-chronicled "O'Hara Girls" trio of Donahue, Ann Gallagher and Marnie McBreen, plus Margit Rinke from the starting lineup, means coach Miller faces a rebuilding job of the first magnitude.

With Haynes and fellow senior tri-captain Katie Wolfe, Sarah Weiss (the third tri-captain), junior Carrie Jewitt, sophomore Laura Newhart and a strong freshman class, Miller and assistant Tom Lochner face a schedule that includes a trip to Hoosier-land to face Indiana in the Indiana U. Tournament, the La Salle Invitational during Christmas week, plus its 16-game Atlantic 10 grind, and its four Big 5 rivals.

"Obviously, I think the team had a tremendous season, one of those seasons where the team went out and played its best each and every contest," Miller said. "Our players came to play each and every game and obviously we had a successful season. It's ironic that we finished second two years in a row. Some people had questions as to how we'd do in the strong Atlantic 10 and the team has finished second in our two years in the conference and that answered those questions."

For next year, Miller and Lochner have brought in five players, one for each position on the court.

"Back when Marnie, Ann, Chrissie and Margit came in, it was a major turnover, just as this is going to be," Miller added. "Freshmen will have to contribute because we only have five players left from that very successful group."

One important aside: It's not often that an 10th or 11th player on a basketball team finds space in such an all-embracing roundup as this, especially, in this case, when she only played 13 minutes and didn't score a point all season.

But the Explorers' team boasted an exceptional person in Tina Wahl, a four-year walk-on. All Tina accomplished was to earn a Rhodes Scholar nomination and then advanced to the second round, the farthest any La Salle woman nominee had ever advanced and the first La Salle woman to be named a state finalist.

You no doubt will be reading and hearing more about Wahl in this and other publications in the future but we wanted to sneak her in here since she was an ardent four-year member and left much of her sweat on the Hayman Hall practice court.

Donnie Carr gave early notice of what was ahead in his very first varsity game. He peppered the nets for 36 points, and this was after missing his first five shots. From then on, his scoring was what could only be called astronomical.

Following that outburst at Mount St. Mary's, Philadelphia Inquirer writer Joe Juliano penned in his Sunday story: "The future of La Salle basketball appeared last night and its name is Donnie Carr."

After a heady early-season ride atop the NCAA Division I scoring leaders, the freshman from Roman Catholic finished sixth with a 23.9 average, and a high game of 41 points against Fordham at the Explorers' CoreStates Spectrum home court.

It was one of eight games of 30 or more points in a game but, more importantly, it created a record for freshmen in an Atlantic 10 Conference game.

He was voted the conference's Rookie of the Year but in a mysterious happening, did not make any of the Atlantic 10's three all-star teams, embracing 16 players.

Other rookie honors came his way as he, and juniors Mike Gizzi and Shawn Smith helped the Explorers gain about 170 percentage points, going from 6-24 (.200) to 9-17 (.370). And the future continues to look brighter as coach Speedy Morris and assistants Joe Mihalich and Kenny Blakeney gathered in five recruits, and they will be pushing some of the holdovers for starting roles.

Carr was voted to the Philadelphia Big 5 first team and Gizzi made second team while Donnie garnered various first-year honors from publications around the country.

Under Ray Perri, the softball program flourished as it won its way into the Atlantic 10 tournament with an 11-5 record (31-18 overall). Coach Perri was voted the conference's Coach of the Year, freshman pitcher Debbie Klawiter was Rookie of the Year and senior Beth Miller made All-Conference.

Another senior, third baseman Kristen Biddle, and junior center fielder Vicki Gross were voted to the All-Tournament team. In the tourney, at the University of Rhode Island, the Explorers encountered a real heart-stopper. Seeded third, they fought 12 innings before bowing to second seed St. Joseph's, 3-2, then lost to Temple in a rain-soaked second-round game.

Miller, Biddle, second baseman Jen Rueter and right fielder Margaret Hammond represented the senior class well and the program will miss those four stalwarts.

Klawiter's pitching performance after a shaky 5-7 start bodes well for the future and she'll be joined on the mound by junior Janice McGinty and several freshmen hurlers.

Junior Meghan Andros led the Atlantic 10 hitters with a .411 average (also good for 37th in the NCAA Division I rankings).

After what could have been a discouraging 11-1 loss at Princeton, Joan Broderick, in her third term as head coach, rallied her field hockey forces together and won three significant games, beating Rutgers and Atlantic 10 opponent Temple each for the first time, and West Chester, which is in the Atlantic 10 for field hockey.

Freshman Donnie Carr, who led the nation in scoring for much of the year, was named the Atlantic 10 Conference Rookie of the Year.

From there, behind the goalkeeping of senior Dori Shumadine and the scoring of senior Erin Dalton and junior Colleen Bruno, the Explorers fought their way into the conference tournament, where they lost to Rhode Island, 2-0.

Shumadine capped off an outstanding career that saw her finish with an 86.2 Save Percentage, one of the best in Division I for a four-year mark.

A graduate of Salem High in Virginia Beach, Va., Shumadine made second team Mid-Atlantic Regional, All American.

"Dori was sensational," said coach Broderick. "She had a great year, a wonderful career. And some of our victories, especially against the Atlantic 10 teams and Rutgers, were extremely significant."

.....

Another record-smasher came early in the swimming season, when a double dual victory over Drexel and Fordham gave coach John Lyons his 104th men's win. That sank the 27-year-old mark of Joe Kirk, after whom the Hayman Hall swim site is named.

Lyons' 15-year coaching career was well summed up in The Collegian, where Mark Schugsta wrote: "His latest success is not only a celebration of achievement but also a celebration of character. Lyons' record-breaking wins. . . shed light on a man and a career that deserves unconditional praise."

Meanwhile, back in the water:

Dina Dormer, as she has for three years, churned her way to a bevy of honors, including the MVP in the Atlantic 10 meet and in the ECAC's. In that ECAC meet, the Explorers' 800 freestyle relay quartet of Dormer, Trisha Swanson, Dawn Leonard and Melissa Koch, all underclasswomen, set a meet mark of 7:39.33. The women came in second of 31 schools and the men finished third out of 37.

Just as impressive—both men and women were second-placers in the Atlantic 10 championships. Among the women, 13 members achieved personal bests. Dormer set three school standards and was a member of two record-setting relay teams. Trisha Swanson's 1:53.3 in the 200 freestyle also was a school record.

Add to that the fact that 13 women posted GPAs of 3.0 or better in the classroom and you have a pretty good idea of the caliber of people that coaches Lyons, Malachi Cunningam and diving mentor Chris Bergere have had in their programs.

Both men's and women's cross-country teams showed up well in the Atlantic 10 championships. The women took third, the men fourth. Seniors Tom Sabol and Troy Harry were the bulwarks for the men's team and the women were paced by senior Terry Carroll, junior Johanna Grochawalski and sophomore Elena Gomez.

Carroll, from Cardinal O'Hara High, pulled off a triple in the Atlantic 10 championships, then led off the 4x1500 with a 4:22, in the Penn Relays, enabling the Explorers to finish sixth in the prestigious Championship of America Relay. Senior Teri Cook finished second in the 10K in the Atlantic 10 meet.

Under the energetic leadership of coaches Matt Kelly and Pat McCann, the La Salle crews continue their march upstream and, more and more, become factors in the big regattas.

In the extremely-competitive Dad Vail Regatta on the Schuylkill, the women's varsity lightweight eight came within 4.5 seconds of nationally-ranked Villanova. The women's novice heavyweight boat captured its heat, then lost in the semifinals by .004 of a second to Temple.

In the ninth annual La Salle Invitational, the women's lightweight eight placed third, the lightweight four won its race and the novice eight finished fourth.

The Dad Vail also produced a heart-breaking loss for the men's lightweight eight when it missed qualifying for the finals in the faster heat by one second. The men's novice lightweight eight won its heat, then finished fourth in finals.

Just as encouraging as the athletes' performances were at Dad Vail, coaches McCann and Kelly were just as enthused over the reaction of the many La Salle alums on hand.

"They were great," Kelly said. "They congratulated Pat and me and told us that was as good a La Salle showing as there has been in a long time for a long while.

Another high point came in the Mid-Atlantic championships in Virginia where the women's varsity lightweight and women's novice eight captured firsts, as did the men's novice lightweight

Another Dad Vail highlight was the christening of four boats. One eight-oared shell was named in honor of one-time coach Mark Valenti; another for Robert H. Morro, '58 (a member of the

Chrissie Donahue moved into second place on the career scoring list for women's basketball while being named to the Atlantic 10 Conference and Big Five first teams.

La Salle Hall of Athletes as part of a 1957 Dad Vail championship crew). Two fours were named after parents who provide much help for the program, William and Marie Jones.

To top it all off, the women's lightweight varsity eight received an invitation to the world-famous IRA championships.

If you were at any of the Explorers' baseball games and wandered behind the backstop, you saw something rather unusual — scouts, three and four at a time — with their "guns" to time the speed of La Salle pitcher Will Fleck.

A transfer from Mercer County (N.J.) Community College by way of Delaware Valley Regional High, Fleck had been drafted by the Miami Marlins after his year at Mercer. His fast ball, which at times reached 94 mph and his overall performance drew season-long attention. In the June Major League Draft, FLeck was chosen in the 41st round by the Atlanta Braves. He later signed with that National League powerhouse.

The junior right-hander started off OK, to say the least, tossing a no-hitter at the Georgetown Hoyas in his first start. By time the team had finished its 19-27 season, he had impressed those "gunners" with a 5-5 record, an Earned Run Average of 3.35 (although it was around 2.40 much of the season and a .200 Batting Average-yield.

Then, of course, there was Brian Schaller, as there was for four years. Have some figures:

—A career batting average of .351 (La Salle's eighth best overall and fifth among four-year players); 134 Runs Batted In (third); 30 home runs (second), 246 hits (second), 156 runs (fifth) and 64 stolen bases.

And, of course, there was that outstanding scholastic achievement he posted throughout his four La Salle years. He completed his work with a four-year GPA of 3.90 (out of 4.0) in his Accounting major. As a junior, he was one of only 11 NCAA Division I baseball players to make the GTE Academic All-American team. He repeated this year.

Playing with only a few reserves, the women's soccer team posted a 3-14-1 record. Coach Craig Dorman has padded his roster for the forthcoming fall campaign to make up for that shortcoming and also for the graduation loss of seniors Krista Garberina, Kati Burke and Julie Chini.

Junior Laura Winchester garnered some recognition for the team by being named to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference team, and four-year standout Garberina made the conference's All-Academic Team.

Freshman goalie Kristin Washburn displayed "iron-women" credentials by playing every minute (1,620) on the 18-game schedule.

SPORTS OF ALL SORTS

Wrestling experienced its second consecutive winning season with a 10-6 record. Senior Jimmy Savage, 150-lb. class, was 23-2; John Cholwin, 120, posted a 14-6 record. Savage and Dave Citta were the only seniors so the grapplers (that's an old sportswriters term) bode well for the future. . .Jason Klotkowski and assistant Monica Standring took over the Volleyball program and encountered many of the same difficulties as their predecessors—lack of depth and size and few experienced players. However, the use of those underclassmen, playing alongside the senior trio of Jenn Thomczek, Shannon McEnroe and Margaret Hammond, plus an influx of some heralded new talent, puts a brighter light on the future. . . Joe Boyle's Men's Golf team captured the Ocean City (Md.) Invitational, in which Eric McNamee finished first, including one round of 69 on his card. The senior from Laurel Lakes, N.J. (Paul VI), led the team or finished second in every meet except one, and he finished third in that one. . .Pat Shanahan's Men's Tennis team showed continued upgrading, posting an 8-11 mark and finishing 4th in the ECACs. An Atlantic 10 Tournament victory over St. Joseph's helped close the season on a high note. Drew Elder stood out, winning 10 of his 12 matches. . .The Women's Tennis team, using mostly underclassmen, struggled but coach Harold Conway's constant use of freshmen such as Stephanie Bono and Christina Androtti provides hope for improvement.

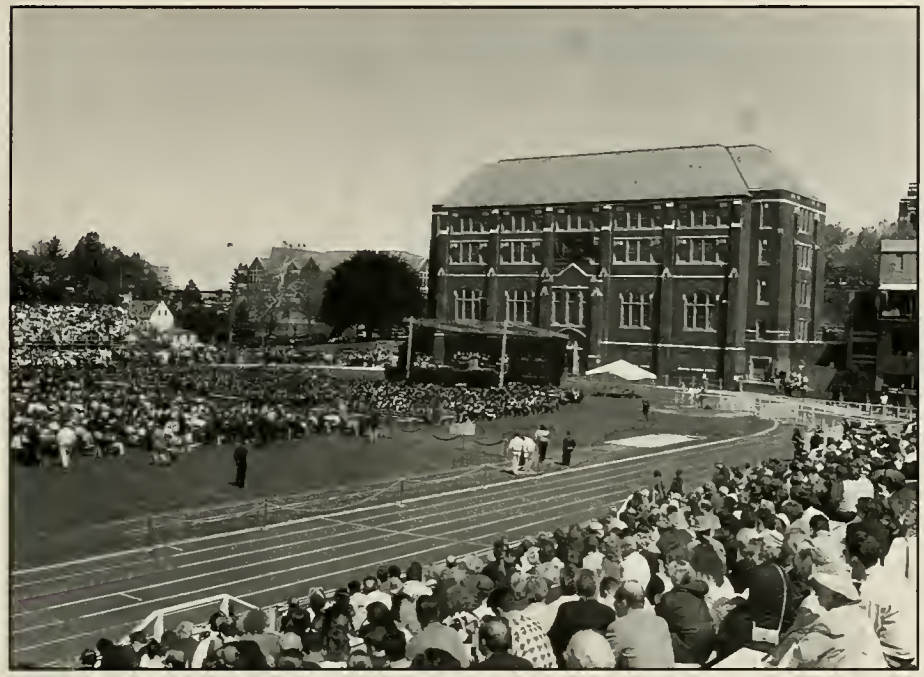
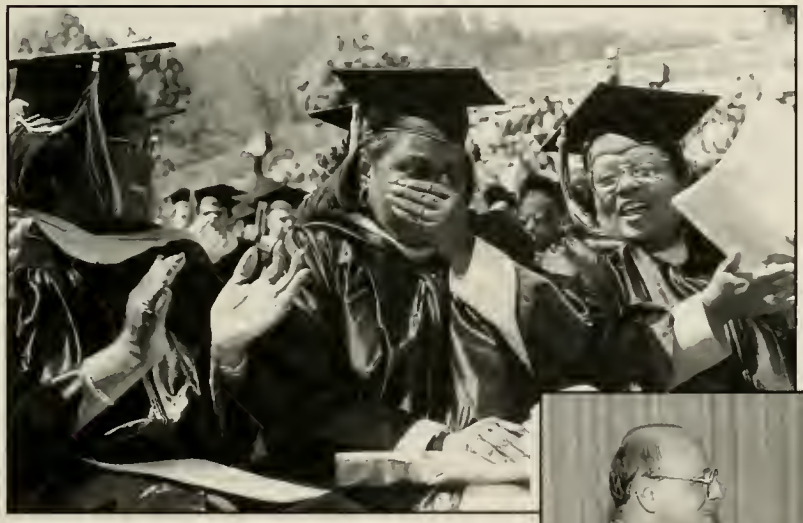
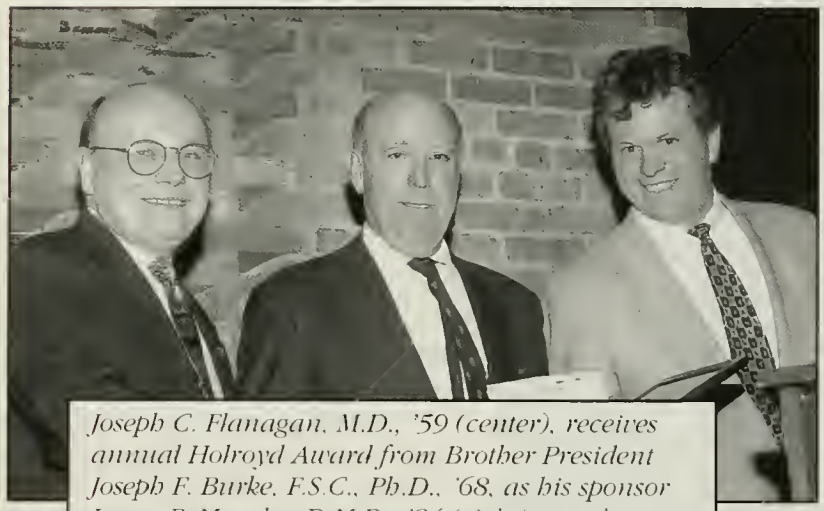
La Salle's 134th Commencement Returns Outdoors on Campus



For the first time since 1949, La Salle held its commencement on campus at McCarthy Stadium as nearly 1,200 graduates received bachelor's and master's degrees. Highlights of the ceremony included the presentation of an honorary doctor of humane letters degree to Soshitsu Sen XV (bottom, center), grand tea master of Japan's largest tea school, the Urasenke School. Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68 (left) made the presentation along with Brother Joseph Keenan, F.S.C., Ph.D., '56, an associate professor of religion who directs tea ceremony instruction at La Salle, an official branch of the Urasenke School which has more than 2 million students in 35 nations. Another highlight saw Blanche White (center photo) react to a surprise invitation from La Salle's president to receive her bachelor's degree in social work ahead of schedule at the beginning of the program. This enabled White to leave the ceremony in time to drive with her family to Washington, D.C.,to see her oldest daughter, Gail Ramsey, receive her master's degree in communication at American University's commencement.



University Honors Alumnus-Ophthalmologist at 18th Annual Holroyd Lecture



Joseph C. Flanagan, M.D., '59 (center), receives annual Holroyd Award from Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, as his sponsor James P. Murphy, D.M.D., '84 (right), watches.

Dr. Joseph C. Flanagan, '59, director of the Oculoplastic Department at Philadelphia's Wills Eye Hospital and professor of ophthalmology at Lankenau Hospital, received the 1997 Holroyd Award at the university's 18th annual Holroyd Lecture in the Dan Rodden Theatre on April 11.

Flanagan, a past president of the American Society of Ophthalmic Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery, is a Fellow in ophthalmic plastic surgery at Manhattan Eye, Ear and Throat Medical Hospital and national medical advisor at the Center for Advanced Eye Surgery at Humana Hospitals, in Lexington, Ky.

Following the presentation, prominent medical ethicist William F. May, of Southern Methodist University, led a discussion on "Ethical Dilemmas in a Changing Healthcare Environment." A former advisor to President Clinton's Task Force on National Health Care Reform, May told several hundred Holroyd attendees that the automobile, a force outside of medicine, had introduced changes to health care delivery, moving the center of care from the home to the doctor's office, then to hospitals — changes that had placed health care delivery "on alien turf for patients, creating anxiety and suspicion for them.

"Doctors have gone from being lone rangers to being part of a large-scale institutional hierarchy," May said. The proprietary medical school has been dissolved in favor of a university-based education.

"The third-party pay system has increased the cost of health care delivery," explained May, who is the Cary M. Maguire Professor of Ethics at SMU and co-founder of the Hastings Center, where he has co-chaired its group studying issues of death and dying. In the 1980s, May added, "all the incentives were for over treatment. Health care as a percentage of the Gross National Product in the United States went from 4.5 to 14 percent."

May said the U.S. has been going through a "Stealth Revolution" on health care in the 1990s. "People thought they were going to get health reform from Washington," he said. "Instead, we've gone from a fee-for-service system to a prepay system, from an emphasis on acute care to an emphasis on preventative care, from over treatment to incentives for under treatment, from a loosely monitored system to a tightly monitored one." Neither approach, he said, offers universal health care many Americans had hoped for, and some 40 million Americans are under treated in today's managed care environment.

One result is an identity crisis for doctors who "want to be good physicians and not just dispensers of medicine," May said. "Physicians have business incentives to move people through the system quickly, but many doctors and nurses see the importance of teaching patients preventative medicine. Effective teaching, however, is a slow process. It takes time to empower others with the knowledge they need." The dilemma has doctors asking what it means to be a professional healer.

La Salle faculty respondents Dr. Cynthia Capers and Msgr. Joseph Devlin, Ph.D., made brief follow-up comments.

Capers, interim dean of La Salle's School of Nursing, described the plight of the "under served" in a diverse society. She spoke critically of a legislation strategy that targets under served populations to receive primary health care services from volunteers "who are not held accountable." And she commented on a modern philosophy of health care that sometimes "treats the body as a commodity to be bought and sold, and which seeks to please people as consumers rather than being concerned for delivering health care to the population as a whole."

Devlin, who has taught bioethics at La Salle for 25 years, asked whether too much of a corporate ethos in medicine prevents patients from becoming true collaborators in their health care. In such a climate, physicians may convey an attitude "that I know better than you," he said. "True teaching honors a patient. There's a dignity to being ill."

In accepting the Holroyd Award, Flanagan recalled being taught as a freshman by Dr. Roland Holroyd, who had a 53-year career teaching biology to pre-med students at La Salle. "He taught me how to take in knowledge and assimilate it in such a way that I could present it back in an orderly way," Flanagan said. "I think of his discipline to this day whenever I make the last stitch in a surgery. My education has stood me well."

Holroyd taught biology at La Salle from 1920 to 1973 and became the university's first emeritus professor. The university's Science Center bears his name.

Finance Professor Wins Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching

"Next to my family, teaching is my great love," says Kathleen Scotti McNichol, '75 ('81 MBA), an assistant professor of finance at the university who described herself as "thrilled and honored" to have been designated this year's recipient of a Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Award for distinguished teaching. McNichol has taught at La Salle for 14 years and also coordinates the risk management and insurance minor. McNichol majored in psychology and sociology as an undergraduate, then returned to earn her MBA. After graduating, she did outcomes research for local non-profit organizations and underwriting policy analysis for the Colonial Penn Insurance Co. But the lure of the classroom drew her back to La Salle. "Teaching for me is compelling, fulfilling and mentally stimulating," she says.

Diplomat-in-Residence Conference Focuses on "Islam and the West"

For the one-half-billion women living in Islam around the globe, the demands of modern life often clash with what extremists believe to be traditional Islamic values, Mahnaz Afkhami said during a three-day La Salle Diplomat-In-Residence Conference in April addressing the subject, "Islam and the West."

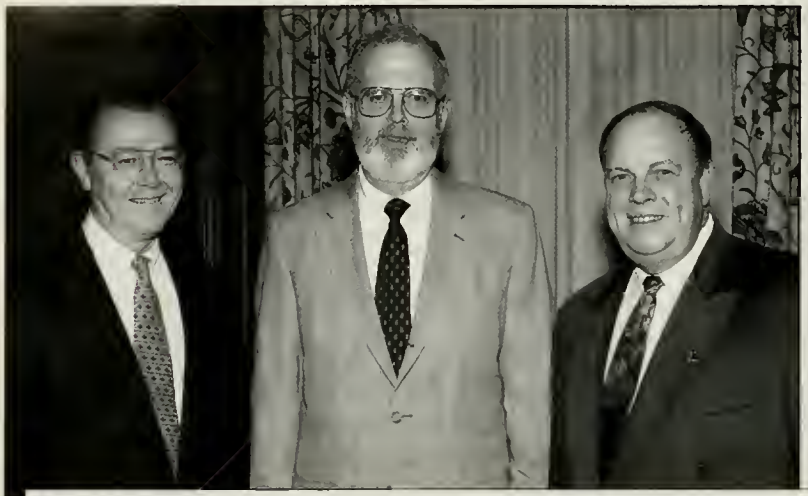
Afkhami, author of a guide for women in Islam entitled Claiming Our Rights: A Manual for Women's Human Rights Education in Muslim Societies, said Western stereotypes are destructive to the self-image of women in Muslim societies.

The director of an organization concerned for the human rights of Muslim women, she noted that Americans continue to have little appreciation or understanding of Muslims even though Islamic adherents number 6-8 million in the United States and 80 percent of the 1,000 mosques on U.S. soil have been built within the past 12 years.

Nearly 1,000 individuals attended portions or all of the conference. Speakers included ambassadors to the U.S. from three nations with significant Muslim populations—Egypt, Sudan, and Indonesia.

Felicia H. Gordon, who has been serving as the university's director of the annual fund, has been promoted to director of capital fund-raising with principal responsibilities for generating the resources for the Hayman Hall and the Holroyd Science Center projects. Andrew H. Jaffee has been promoted from assistant director to director of the annual fund.

La Salle Announces New MBA Curriculum "More Relevant to Students Aspiring to be Tomorrow's Visionary Corporate Leaders"



Gathering to toast the 40th birthday of La Salle's School of Business Administration on March 6 were (from left): Dr. Joseph Kane, '56, the university's provost and former dean of the Business School; Dr. Bruce MacLeod, also a former Business School dean, and Gregory O. Bruce, '81 MBA, the current dean. The 20th anniversary of La Salle's MBA Program was also observed during the ceremony at The Union League of Philadelphia witnessed by several hundred alumni, guests, and friends.

"MBA programs have to change with business if they are going to effectively meet the needs of working professionals today and tomorrow," according to Gregory Bruce, dean of La Salle University's School of Business Administration. "For La Salle that means dramatically changing our MBA curriculum so that it's relevant to part-time students who aspire to be tomorrow's visionary corporate leaders."

Bruce explained that most of La Salle's MBA students juggle studies with a full-time position, often in middle management. Because of the integrated approach, students can probably cut one year off the time it used to take to earn an MBA.

"For the most part," he said, "these students realize the future for middle managers is much in doubt. Either they get the credentials they need to be leaders or they run the risk of falling prey to continued downsizing in organizations. They need preparation to become valued leaders who are strategic thinkers and visionaries."

Traditional part-time MBA programs "teach people how to manage things more than educating how to manage ideas and lead people," Bruce said. "The usual approach has been to instruct about discrete business skills rather than integrating those skills into a course approach that takes advantage of a working professional's experience. The new approach helps the professional develop his or her leadership potential and learn how to make the best decisions."

La Salle's version of the new approach will be introduced this fall — a new MBA curriculum for these students who sense they are part of today's business firestorm. Bruce believes the new curriculum is unique in the Philadelphia region because it's directed solely at part-time students. "The new courses integrate areas of study that are naturally combined in the workplace," he explained.

Speaking in detail about the program's benefits and changes that have been made, Bruce said, "We've focused before on teaching how to manage 'things' — like monies, accounts, transactions, processes and production. That's not enough.

"Working professionals and our business partners tell us they need a background to manage people and ideas too," Bruce said. "They've been asking for an education that prepares them to be leaders and to know how, working with others, to arrive quickly at the best decisions in a rapidly changing environment. They need to know how to use informational tools and develop the kind of people-oriented skills that prepare them for success as leaders in an expanding global business environment."

For example, the program at La Salle has previously taught Accounting and Financial Statement Analysis as separate course disciplines, explains Joseph Ugras, director of La Salle's MBA Program and the Business School's associate dean. "Now they are being blended in such a way as to teach not only the skills, but also how to be the kind of visionary leader to make best use of those skills.

"This kind of approach will make for what we believe is both an effective and efficient educational experience for part-time students who are experienced working professionals," Ugras added. "Students will be able to capitalize on their experience with this curriculum and combine it with the theory necessary to understand why we do the things we do in business."

Bruce, who directed La Salle's MBA Program before he became dean, has spent much of his time not only listening to working professionals, but also fine-tuning development of a Business Advisory Board featuring representatives from organizations like Crown Cork & Seal, Johnson & Johnson, Arthur Andersen and Bloomberg Financial Markets.

"They constantly give us a real-life connection to the-day-to-day business world," Bruce said, adding that need for change has been clear in recent years, but the business school was concerned to also maintain quality in going about the process. "After all, we're among a select group of Schools of Business Administration accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business. Accreditation gives students some confidence they're getting a quality education, but in today's marketplace, the reality clearly is that accreditation isn't enough."

"This program is exactly what we want our best managers to go through," said Louis Eccleston, managing director of Bloomberg Financial Markets and chair of the School's Business Advisory Board. "La Salle's been listening carefully to what we've desperately been trying to communicate to business schools — what they need to teach our employees in order for us to be successful."

"Working professionals can qualify for it even if they don't have an undergraduate degree in business," said Brian Niles, director of marketing and graduate enrollment for the School of Business Administration. Niles said another factor that distinguishes the new curriculum is that it will be offered in four locations—La Salle's main campus in Northwest Philadelphia, at the university's new Bucks County Center scheduled to open in the Fall in Newtown, at Delaware Valley College in Doylestown, and at La Salle's new center at Albright College in Reading.

English Professor's Work on Irish Women Poets Chosen one of Year's 'Outstanding Academic Books'

Dr. Patricia Boyle Haberstroh, chair of La Salle University's English Department, says she especially enjoys watching students develop the analytical skill to appreciate poetry that they couldn't understand at first.

"It's a kind of discovery for them," says Haberstroh, who's been teaching 30 years, "because I tell them they can do something in learning to appreciate poetry that they don't always think is possible in the beginning."

These days Haberstroh is enjoying discovery herself in broader literary circles. Her new book, Women Creating Women: Contemporary Irish Women Poets (Syracuse University Press, 1996), was chosen as one of the outstanding academic books published in 1996 by Choice, the American Library Association's magazine which serves as a guide for librarians.

From more the estimated 20,000 books published each year, Choice editors choose which ones to review. Then they select a limited number of books for special recognition. Choice named Haberstroh's work as one of 1996's 50 best in the language and literature category, citing the book for its "overall excellence in presentation and scholarship."

Haberstroh's work was created during six years of travel to Ireland. She came to know and value not only the works of five Irish women poets but also their lives. She interviewed extensively each of the writers, Eithne Strong, Eavan Boland (probably the best known), Eilean Ni Chuilleanain, Medbh McGuckian, and Nuala Dhomhnaill.

The Choice review says Haberstroh's examination of the women's works "challenges the patriarchal view of modern Irish poetry as dominated by Yeats, Kavanagh and now Heaney. Through a study of the themes, image patterns, and lyric voices that develop within and between these poets' works (along with a more cursory discussion of poetry written since the 1980s), Haberstroh shows how Irish women poets have created "alternatives to the stereotypical and idealized images" generated by traditional male representations.

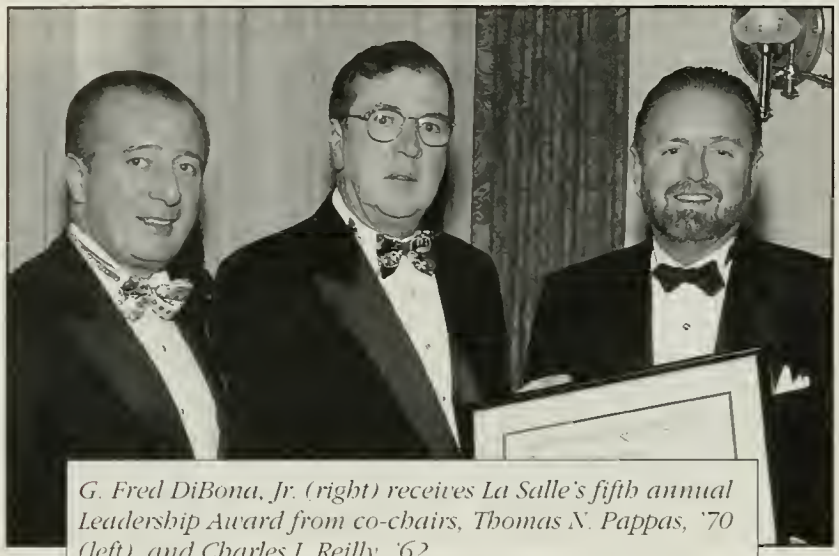
The review takes care to note that the work is not only for graduate and undergraduate students and faculty, but also for general audiences. Her book has also received reviews from the London Times Literary Supplement, Irish Times, and the Irish Literary Supplement.

Haberstroh has a natural-born love of Ireland. "Both of my parents were born there," she explained, adding that she's always loved modern poetry and wrote a dissertation on the works of Ezra Pound while earning her Ph.D. from Bryn Mawr College. In contemplating contemporary Irish poets and learning about who they are, she noticed that male poets there seemed to have easier access to publishers and clearly are more widely read than their women counterparts.

Her work speculates on the impact on women's poetry of William ButlerYeats and Patrick Kavanagh. Haberstroh notes the influence of the Catholic Church and the Irish Constitution on role expectations for women and then considers the extent to which women may have been harmed by the idealization of women in Irish culture and literature.

"The women I came to know were writing about what goes on inside the home, exposing the reality of women's lives, the true feelings of mothers, daughters, wives, lovers as opposed to the idealized women in earlier literature," she said.

President of Independence Blue Cross Receives Leadership Award at Fifth Annual Charter Dinner



G. Fred DiBona, Jr. (right) receives La Salle's fifth annual Leadership Award from co-chairs, Thomas N. Pappas, '70 (left), and Charles J. Reilly, '62.

G. Fred DiBona, Jr., president and CEO of Independence Blue Cross for the past seven years, received La Salle's fifth annual Leadership Award at the Charter Dinner celebrating the 134th anniversary of the university on March 22 at The Union League of Philadelphia.

DiBona, who also serves as president and CEO of Keystone Health Plan East, was honored for his "outstanding leadership in the corporate, civic, and government communities that shape the quality of life in this region," according to La Salle's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, who presented the award.

Thomas N. Pappas, '70, managing principal and senior vice president of Johnson and Higgins and the president of The Union League of Philadelphia, and Charles J. Reilly, '62, president and chief executive officer of Reilly Foam Corporation, were co-chairs of the black-tie dinner attended by 280 guests. Dick Vermeil, the coach of the St. Louis Rams of the NFL, was master of ceremonies.

Speaking from his experience in running a business and being involved in the civic life of Philadelphia, DiBona said that graduates of La Salle and other Catholic institutions demonstrate "proven value and positive achievement on every level" of the region's corporate activity.

"I still believe strongly in public education," said DiBona. "But I also believe that public education has much to learn from its parochial counterpart."

DiBona referred to a recent ABC-TV report on Catholic schools in which the network said that such schools "do more with less money, have high expectations for everyone—not just the cream of the crop, have more teachers and fewer bureaucrats, and—above all—are characterized by discipline and character development."

Although these observations apply primarily to Catholic elementary and secondary schools, DiBona emphasized that there is no break in the continuity to higher education.

"Character development, discipline and values don't end at high school graduation," DiBona continued. "They must continue to be nurtured as the years go on—and that is the special quality of an institution like La Salle."

Explaining how La Salle has evolved into a full-fledged university of national and international standing, DiBona added that La Salle has adjusted to the demands of a high-tech economy and a complex society.

"It's graduates still come from Kensington and West Philadelphia," DiBona added. "But they also come from California, Illinois, and countries throughout the world. Yet it remains firmly rooted in the Christian Brothers tradition. Its core values are the same today as they were when the school was founded in 1863. It's economic, social, athletic, and religious contributions to the life of this city remain as vital as ever."

Through its leadership, faculty, and alumni, said DiBona, La Salle University "sends a clear message that bigger isn't better—better is better, that adapting to change must not compromise its moral character, and that secular achievement must go hand-in-hand with its Christian Brothers heritage."

Although he is not a graduate of La Salle, DiBona said that he has contact "on an everyday basis" and "makes tough decisions" with many of its graduates who are among the area's most successful board members, civic leaders, and professionals. "They are competent—but with a competence informed by integrity," he explained. "They are professionals—but with a professionalism instilled with principles. And they are pragmatic—but their pragmatism is leavened with a genuine concern for a higher public interest."

DiBona added that the best measure of a school is the people it produces. "And the people I know from La Salle have never forgotten where they came from or what their true purpose in life is all about. That's what we're here to celebrate at this leadership dinner.

Tonight this award may be given to me. But it is really a reflection of you."

Since becoming president and CEO of Independence Blue Cross in April, 1990, DiBona has positioned the health insurance corporation as a national leader in the industry by spearheading innovative changes in customer service, fiscal management, provider relations, and product management. IBC has parent and subsidiary annual revenues of $2.5 billion, more than 4,700 employees, and nearly 2.5 million members.

In 1996, DiBona chaired the United Way of Southeastern Pennsylvania fund-raising campaign. He is a member of the Board of the Pennsylvania Intergovernmental Cooperation Authority which oversees the financial condition of the City of Philadelphia. In 1995, he was a co-recipient with former U.S. President George Bush of the National Patriot's award from the Congressional Medal of Honor Society.

DiBona has served as chairman, president, and chief executive officer of the Greater Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce. He is a member of the Boards of the Greater Philadelphia First Corporation, the Philadelphia Industrial Development Corporation, PECO Energy Company, Tasty Baking Company, and Philadelphia Suburban Corporation. A graduate of Davis and Elkins College and the Widener University School of Law, DiBona and his wife, Sylvia, are the parents of a son and a daughter.

The Charter Dinner celebrates the founding of La Salle College on March 20, 1863 and pays tribute to the generations of Christian Brothers, laypersons, and clergy whose dedication has made La Salle the prominent institution that it is today.

Net receipts from the 1997 event amounted to $115,000 bringing the five year total to $397,000. Partial scholarships will be awarded in DiBona's name to five freshmen enrolling this September bringing the total number of scholarships to 14. The balance of the proceeds will be utilized to enhance the university's general scholarship fund.

Previous recipients of La Salle's Leadership Award have been Nicholas A. Giordano, '65, president and chief executive officer of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange; William J. Avery, chairman, CEO and president of Crown Cork and Seal Company, Inc.; Joseph F. Paquette, Jr., chairman and CEO of PECO Energy Company, and Nelson G. Harris, chairman of the Executive Committee of Tasty Baking Company.

La Salle to Offer Entire MBA Program at Albright College

La Salle University will offer a "new" type of MBA Program to Berks County area residents on the campus of Albright College, in Reading, Pa., beginning in September.

The agreement allows students to complete the entire program at Albright. The program features a new "integrated" curriculum tailored to help working professionals capitalize on their experience. The approach has been designed to take into account the needs and demands of businesses operating in today's volatile, rapidly changing marketplace.

La Salle's 40-year-old School of Business Administration currently enrolls some 875 students in its 20-year-old MBA Program. The SBA is accredited by AACSB — The International Association for Management Education. Most of the MBA students are working professionals who study evenings and weekends either at the university's main campus in Northwest Philadelphia or at Delaware Valley College in Doylestown, Pa.

Beginning this fall, the complete program will also be offered at two additional sites — at Albright and at the university's new Bucks County Center in Newtown.

"This agreement with La Salle is consistent with Albright's long-range strategic goal of forming meaningful partnerships that will allow us to better serve Berks County citizens," said Dr. Ellen Hurwitz, president of Albright College. "It also broadens the opportunities available to all of our students as they prepare to meet the challenges of the 21st century."

"This agreement is a historic occasion for La Salle," said Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68. "We're proud to be aligned with Albright College and its rich educational tradition. The new association gives us an opportunity to deliver the kind of quality MBA education that working professionals look for in today's rapidly changing marketplace."

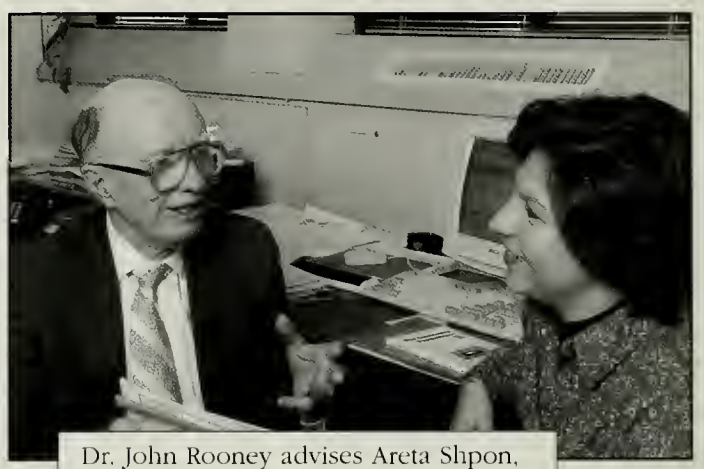
Most of the MBA instruction will be furnished by La Salle SBA faculty. However, Albright faculty members will also provide some instruction.

La Salle designed the ambitious new curriculum based on input from its advisory board of business executives and feedback from students and alumni.

"Programs like ours need to change with business," said Gregory Bruce, dean of La Salle's School of Business Administration. "Most of our students juggle studies with a full-time career. Many are middle managers who realize they need to get the credentials to become truly visionary leaders and decision makers. If they don't qualify themselves to be influential leaders, then they run the risk of falling prey to continued downsizing in organizations."

Bruce said the new curriculum reflects the demands and concerns of the modern workplace. "The approach concentrates on leadership qualities rather than a focus on how to manage 'things,'" he explained.

Psychology Professor has been Practicing what he Preaches for a Half-Century: "Lifelong Learning"



Dr. John Rooney advises Areta Shpon, who earned her master's degree in May.

Dr. John Rooney, '44, likes to tell people that his photograph is in Baseball's Hall of Fame, in Cooperstown, N.Y.

Not that the university's highly-respected professor of psychology was a great ballplayer. Rooney grew up in the 1930s in the shadow of the right field wall at Shibe Park (later Connie Mack Stadium) in North Philadelphia. His parents sold rooftop seats to fans of the old Philadelphia Athletics of the American League as did their other rowhouse neighbors. In Rooney's "Hall of Fame" photo, he's sitting with his brother on his front steps, below a sign on the front of his neighbor's home offering $500 to any ballplayer who is able to hit the sign with a home run.

For nearly 50 years Dr. Rooney has taught and advised hundreds of La Salle University students, most recently as director of the university's Graduate Counseling/Psychology program.

Rooney joined La Salle's staff in 1947 after returning from a World War II tour as a U.S. Navy flight instructor. Since then, he has spent a significant amount of time emphasizing to students that "lifelong-learning" is extremely crucial in their career development.

"Once students went to school, got a degree and stayed with a career," recalled Rooney. "Today, with the rapidity of change, it's critical to urge students to constantly keep current, to learn how to keep learning, and to learn how to network constantly with others."

Rooney explained that since society is intensely mobile, people today change careers frequently. Such Technological innovations like the Internet enable users to be in touch more easily with others all over the world—people with dramatically diverse perspectives and backgrounds.

"In such a global society," Rooney added, "we are all minorities with particular perceptions, ideas and values. A critical part of any higher education experience is to assist students in being sensitive to cultural diversity. We have to help students recognize prejudice in themselves and others."

Rooney says that a knowledge of psychology benefits everyone. "The role of psychology education today is not only to train experts on how to treat people professionally, but also to help people understand themselves and others better," he explained. "All kinds of people can benefit greatly from this knowledge whether they work with computers or technology, serve as specialty engineers, educators or managers in business. We need to work harder to combine our knowledge of special skills with an understanding of psychological principles."

Rooney says that being a faculty member for 50 years still invigorates him. "It's a great way to meet people and hear new ideas," he explained. "I've always found teaching and advising to be processes through which you build on what students already bring to you."

Although he's had a number of opportunities to teach at other institutions during his career, Rooney says that La Salle's "personality" was a strong incentive to keep him at the university. "The teaching emphasis allows you to get close to students, and I have many friends on the faculty."

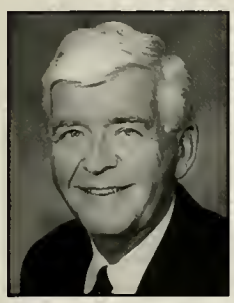
Lori Clarke has joined the University's Development staff as assistant director. A Development Center intern from Bloomsburg University where she is a recent communication studies graduate, Clarke has also worked as an office assistant in Bloomsburg's Alumni Affairs office. Besides assisting in the alumni fund-raising program with an emphasis on personal solicitation, Clarke will coordinate the fund-raising activities of the Parents' Association.

Charles Diamond Appointed Director of New Bucks Center



Charles H. Diamond, originator of an in-house training department for Crown Cork & Seal Co., Inc., has been appointed director of La Salle University's new Bucks County Center, scheduled for a September opening in Newtown, Pa.

"I'm excited about the challenge of starting up such an ambitious project with the potential to have an impact on so many lives," Diamond says. "This is a wonderful opportunity for me to take advantage of and build upon my experiences in the fields of education and business."

Diamond, who lives in Solebury and who has lived either full or part-time in Bucks County for 26 years, says news of the Center has brought "an enthusiastic response from the Bucks civic and business communities. A real appreciation exists in Bucks County for La Salle's tradition, history and name recognition. People here know well of La Salle's reputation for academic excellence. They clearly believe having an educational opportunity like this one right next door is going to make their lives a lot less complicated when it comes to conveniently continuing their education."

Diamond explained that the drive to the Bucks County Center from Philadelphia International Airport and downtown Philadelphia often "takes as little as 35 minutes, and that means many business people can attend an evening class or two after a relatively short drive toward home from where they work." Diamond predicts that the location will prove appealing for residents of Bucks and Montgomery counties and many residents of New Jersey.

Diamond began setting up the management and employee training department at Crown five years ago and believes his background in business will aid the Center greatly. "I really understand what is happening with professionals today," he says. "There's a lot of urgency surrounding modern life in business. Things just never stay the same.

"I think it's critical that adult learners enrolling at the Bucks Center understand that we feel that sense of urgency on their part, and that it means a great deal to us that we are responsive to their needs," Diamond says. "We're here to understand the complexities of their lives and get them where they want to go."

Diamond has taught in La Salle's MBA Program and served on the faculties of Delaware Valley, Immaculata, and Chestnut Hill Colleges. From 1989 to 1992, he served as a consultant to the Holy Redeemer Health System, Huntingdon Valley, Pa., in developing a Mission Assurance Model that included a comprehensive plan and curriculum to develop leadership roles within the organization. For the previous seven years, he was director of ecumenical and interreligious affairs for the Archdiocese of Philadelphia.

Diamond has been director of staff, student and patient counseling services at the Medical College of Pennsylvania, Eastern Pennsylvania Psychiatric Institute, and Philadelphia College of Textiles. He was formerly a teacher and administrator at Philadelphia's Cardinal Dougherty and Roman Catholic High Schools. He also chaired the social studies curriculum development committee for the Office of Catholic Education, Archdiocese of Philadelphia. He and his wife, Roseann, have two adult sons, Joseph, '97, and Sean.

La Salle Volunteers for President's Summit

More than 60 students, faculty and administrators from the university participated in the Germantown cleanup project on April 27 as part of President Clinton's Summit on Volunteerism. More than 1,000 people from La Salle contribute 100,000 hours annually to some 20 community organizations in volunteer efforts coordinated by the university's Center for Community Learning.

Zane Robinson Wolf Appointed Dean of School of Nursing

Dr. Zane Robinson Wolf, director of La Salle's Master of Science in Nursing Program, has been named dean of the university's School of Nursing.

Wolf is a founding faculty member of the School of Nursing at La Salle, having been awarded the School's first faculty contract in 1980. She was promoted to the rank of professor in 1991 and was the first faculty member to hold a joint appointment between the university and Albert Einstein Medical Center, where she was associate director for nursing service and research from 1990 to 1994.

Wolf started the Master of Science in Nursing Program in 1988 and is president-elect of the Pennsylvania League of Nursing.

"I am really excited to have the opportunity to serve as dean," Wolf said. "I am concerned that we do all we can to meet the needs and concerns of teachers and students well during a time when the healthcare marketplace is undergoing a great deal of change. We need to emphasize the core values of nursing."

Wolf explained that La Salle's School of Nursing has a strong reputation for appropriately teaching the knowledge, skills and attitudes associated with the nursing profession. She said she has two additional primary objectives — building on the School's partnerships both with health agencies and communities in La Salle's vicinity, also emphasizing research by faculty and students alike.

One way the School develops community partnerships is through its Neighborhood Nursing Center with two locations in Germantown/Olney. The Center's outreach provides services such as prenatal care, cancer screenings and lead-poison-prevention education to about 3,000 persons or families a year. The Center serves as a platform for education for nursing students striving to learn how to serve in public health neighborhood settings.

Wolf's husband, Charles J. Wolf, III, M.D., '65, is chairman of the Department of Medicine at Pennsylvania Hospital. They have three children, Jessica, Zana and Kerrin.

Dr. Cynthia Flynn Capers, who has been serving as interim dean for the past year, guided the School through its self-study for reaccreditation by the National League of Nurses. Recent site visits as part of the reaccreditation process produced recommendations for the reaccreditation, but the process is still ongoing.

Alumni Brothers to Open Middle School in Camden

Brothers Michael Anderer, '94, Patrick Cassidy, '92, and William Johnson, '65, have received approval by the Christian Brothers Task Force for a new apostolate to open a middle school for at-risk boys in Camden, N.J.

The school, which will be named the Saint Miguel School after the Ecuadorian Christian Brother, will be located in a building owned by Our Lady of Mt. Carmel-Fatima Parish on South Fourth street, in South Camden.

Most of the students in the area are unable to attend Catholic elementary schools due to finances. Thus, the area offers a unique opportunity to provide a quality Catholic education and positive role-modeling for the young men in the area. Latino students have the highest dropout rate of all ethnic groups in the Camden public schools.

The project is the result of a year-long study by the Task Force. It originated from a resolution at the Brothers' ninth District Chapter to initiate a new apostolic work in direct service to the poor. Possibilities were considered in Philadelphia and Washington, D.C., as well as in Camden.

The School will receive financial support from the Christian Brothers' Baltimore District and fund-raising efforts with foundations, corporations, and interested individuals. The only financial obligation of the families will be a small fee.

GOOD-BYE, HAYMAN HALL..... HELLO, HAYMAN CENTER

Hundreds of La Salle alumni, parents, and friends toasted the start of the Hayman Hall renovation and expansion project on May 17, 1997.

The $6.3 million project will be completed in 1998 and will provide 3,300 seats for men's and women's intercollegiate basketball games and 3,800 seats for concerts, convocation, and other student events.

John Miller, H. Blake Hayman, Jr., Brother President Joseph F. Burke, Speedy Morris, and Trey Ulrich break ground for the new Hayman Center.

Doug Overton and Keith Morris join the celebration.

Brother Charles E. Gresh and H. Blake Hayman, Jr. prepare for the ground-breaking.

Now is your chance to be a part of the excitement in revitalizing campus life by making a three-year commitment to the new Hayman Center.

To join one of the Hayman Center Societies, please contact La Salle University's Development Office by telephone (215-951-1539/1540), fax (215-951-1542), or e-mail (development@lasalle.edu).

IT'S A SMALL WORLD AFTER ALL!

OCT 2 9 1997

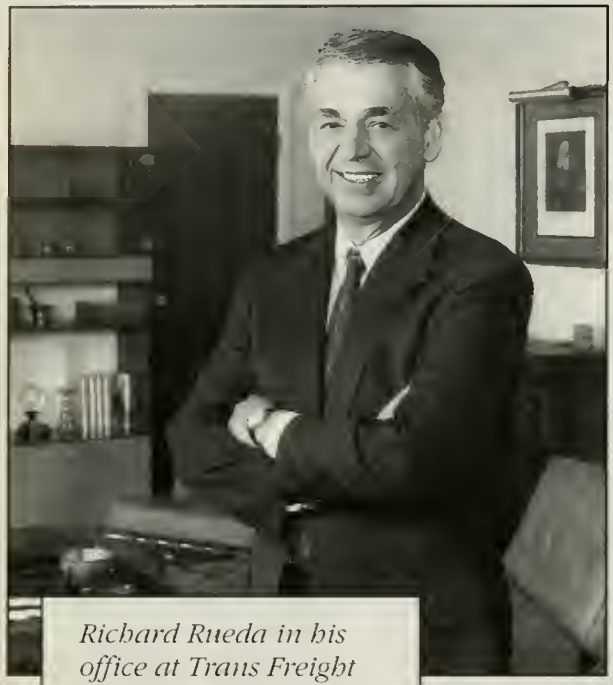
Richard S. Rueda, Esq.,'62, has transported products all over the globe. But there's no place like home

As chief executive officer and owner of Trans Freight Systems,Inc., the Philadelphia-based company vital in the inter-modal transportation logistics field, Richard S. Rueda, Esq., '62, has certainly seen the world. He's had many years booked with more than a dozen trips to the Far East and twice that many to Europe.

But all in all, he would rather be in Philadelphia!

That's why it wasn't difficult for Rueda to make the decision to keep Trans Freight Systems, Inc., in the City of Brotherly Love despite tempting overtures from the offices of New Jersey Governor Christine Todd Whitman and others. Last year, Rueda was advised by Philadelphia's Mayor Ed Rendell that the city would be exercising eminent domain rights because TFS's 55-acre operating site sat directly in the path of Philadelphia International Airport's runway expansion.

"We had no choice," recalls Rueda, who recently relocated the company to a new 40 acre site in Southwest Philadelphia which, upon completion of a $20 million expansion project, is expected to be the most advanced inter-modal facility in the Delaware Valley. "The mayor convinced me to keep the company based within Philadelphia, and even assisted our executive staff in pinpointing a suitable site. Both the city and state then helped us finance the building and expansion projects. Without the support of Mayor Rendell and Governor Ridge, we probably could not have avoided moving into New Jersey or a Philadelphia suburb. Our proximity to the Philadelphia seaports and the International Airport in this new location is ideal for us—less than ten minutes' drive from each. In addition to being extremely close to Interstates #95 and 76 for convenient surface operations, a rail network is also planned. Despite our obvious preference not to move, we made the most of the opportunity by upgrading our facilities in countless ways, particularly technology."



Richard Rueda in his office at Trans Freight Systems, Inc.

In addition, says Rueda, "we feel that we have the civic responsibility to stay in Philadelphia. This city is not only one of the most important business hubs on the East Coast but it is also the cultural center for the metropolitan Delaware Valley. I think that each corporation has to play a role in making sure the city flourishes. I think that anybody who sits in the suburbs and thinks they are going to be insulated from the city's problems is wrong. If the city didn't prosper, there would be a kind of implosion of the suburbs into the city—the two rely upon the strength of each other, in success or failure."

TFS, therefore, is dedicated not only to the furtherance of the company's goals, but also to the cultural, educational, and charitable institutions of the metropolitan area. Rueda is personally able to devote more than 25% of his time to philanthropy because, as he puts it, "I have a strong organizational team. Every one of my executives works in a philanthropic activity of their choice, according to their interests. We don't dictate these activities but we need people who are willing to work hard not only in our business, but also in making our city the best place it can be."

Rueda volunteers his time and guidance as a member of several area Boards of Directors. They include the Philadelphia Zoo, the city's Mann Center for the Performing Arts, the Greater Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, the Lower Merion (Pa.) Symphony Orchestra, the University of Richmond, and, of course, La Salle University where he is one of the newest members of the Board of Trustees.

"La Salle is playing a key role in improving the city by attracting students from all over the Northeast region and providing them with a quality education," Rueda explained. "Many of these students enrich—and many more are enriched by—this great cultural center of Philadelphia."

As far as his role as a university trustee, Rueda said: "We certainly have competent academics and management at La Salle in the terms of the programs being offered and the day-to-day operation of the institution. The Board, on the other hand, is there to give overall direction, to talk about the future, to support the endowment and the school, and to make sure that its long-term planning is viable and continuing."

Rueda is now in the early stages of discussions with Gregory O. Bruce, dean of the School of Business Administration, investigating the feasibility of instituting a certificate-level undergraduate transportation logistics program at La Salle. A symposium on the topic is planned with industry leaders who have expressed considerable enthusiasm and support for such a program that would be offered in the evenings and possibly evolve into a bachelor's degree offering. Such a program is offered at only a few universities nationally.

Trans Freight Systems has ambitious plans to expand its logistics operation throughout the country. Already a major player on the East Coast, operating from Boston to Norfolk, Rueda expects to open 14 new terminals for ocean-going transportation within the next several years.

TFS is celebrating its 25th anniversary this year, an unusual feat, says Rueda, because similar corporations usually don't survive that long. He attributes such longevity to "strong management and a small turnover rate coupled with the ability to recognize that you can't continue to do the same things you did a quarter-of-a-century ago. Every strategy has a beginning and an end," he explained. "It's only valid against the backdrop for which it was originally formulated. And unfortunately, if you keep doing the same thing long enough, that backdrop will change. Keeping abreast of the many technological advances which have changed the industry—and recognizing their value—has also contributed to our success."

Also, says Rueda, TFS has found its proper niche in a global economy with multifaceted transportation needs. "Our niche is not providing just surface operation, or rail operations, or ocean or air operations—even though we're involved in all of those. Our specialty is combining all these modes of transportation and doing it in a logistically sound and professional manner that produces the most economies and efficiencies to the clients we serve."

As examples, adds Rueda, "in serving one of our major accounts, the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board, we take in the liquor off the ship or rail carrier, consolidate it, warehouse it, then deliver it to retail stores as needed. When we developed an international distribution program for The Limited, we acquired the necessary facilities in the Far East, opened up an airport in Ohio to handle the 747 cargo planes and L1011 charters, and developed the necessary ocean-going operations.

"The major transportation companies provide only one or two facets of a total logistics package. It's rare that they incorporate warehousing or surface operations in their services. On the other hand, we're an asset-based logistics company. We own our facilities, our distribution plants and our containers--all of the elements we need in a total logistics package—which makes us a little bit different. If we have to make an investment in material-handling equipment, containers, or whatever is required to make the process work, we do it. The ability to provide this combination of services is what differentiates us from other transportation companies, and what has made us succeed these 25 years."

As all forward-thinking, positive companies do, Rueda and his company have fine-tuned their focus to meet their customers' evolving needs. In the 1980s, Trans Freight was one of the largest "bulk-shipment" air-freight forwarders in the world. "As a result of the technological revolution—particularly the rise of computers—the demand for air-freight transportation subsided and ocean freight has once again become the preferred method of transportation," Rueda explained. "Computerized logistics has made our industry a very efficient one. But it remains critical that we are prepared for, and are able to predict, these changes."

Computerized-logistics has significantly reduced both transportation costs as well as inventory levels. No longer is there a general need to use expedited means to remedy supply and demand imbalances. Computer "modeling" is currently advanced to the point that inventory demand levels can be pre-determined, and EDI reordering is capable of adapting to the longer lead time of ocean transportation. This enhanced information, coupled with a drastic increase in ocean carrier reliability has proven overwhelmingly that ocean freight is the most efficient means of transcontinental shipping.

Rueda, who grew up in Philadelphia's East Oak Lane section near the Cheltenham Township border, attributes his success first and foremost to his father. "He was by far the most unique person I have ever known, and the most influential in my life. My father was a successful business professional who imbued me with an entrepreneurial spirit balanced with complete respect and care for people, for nature and for culture."

As a liberal arts major at La Salle, Rueda says that he didn't begin with a clear vision of his future or his goals. "I think that the Christian Brothers were very tolerant with me," he recalls. "Brother Robert (Paul Doran, the dean of the School of Arts and Sciences) took an interest in me and my education and became a personal advisor. At one point during my second year, I considered leaving college. He called my parents and, after an extensive, four-way discussion, I decided to stay on at La Salle. That's why I feel I owe such a debt to the school—because when I did get into law school I was serious. As a young person I was a little too liberal, thinking I could repair the world, as young people often believe. I learned great patience at La Salle—particularly through

Dean Robert—that kept me on the right track for my final years of undergraduate work. Furthermore, during those years I learned to focus not only on my studies, but on the many opportunities that laid ahead."

Rueda became interested in the transportation field during the summers between law school sessions when he worked for a small local carrier owned by an uncle. "I enjoyed the dynamic nature of transportation. It's always in flux. It's challenging. There's a different situation or a different opportunity before you each day, so it's unique and dynamic in that respect." When he graduated from Richmond, however, there were no transportation law courses being offered anywhere in this country so he enrolled at the London School of Economics and studied international transportation. "I wanted to begin practice in a field that wasn't flooded and would therefore offer great opportunity. Now that area of the law, too, is quite developed and sophisticated."

After returning to the states, Rueda started representing various transportation companies in Philadelphia and New York. Soon he was asked to join and operate some of those firms. They included Leonard Tose's company in Philadelphia and Novo Corp., an international air-freight operation in New York City. In 1975, he was appointed vice president of legal affairs, at Schulman,Inc, a Philadelphia-based ocean-air-surface operation. Three years later he became chief executive officer and owner of Trans Freight System, Inc., a moderate-sized conglomerate.

Rueda and His wife, Zoe, live in Gladwynne, Pa., with their son Richard, Jr., and daughter, Rebekka, who was born in Moscow. Rebekka, now a beautiful and charming two-year-old, was adopted in Russia when she was two-months old. Richard, Jr., is like most eight-year-olds, curious and energetic. He also has a great love for animals, and actually inspired his father to become involved with the Philadelphia Zoo, where he now serves as chairman of four committees and as a member of two others. "My children are the most rewarding, most exciting part of my life," says Rueda. "My wife is my best friend; my children are my favorite companions. Today all of our travel and recreation is centered on them. I am also fortunate to have a very close extended family. My mother, my sister and my nieces and nephews are all part of our daily lives."

Although much of his free time is taken up with different philanthropic activities, Rueda finds time to read frequently, play tennis a couple of times a week, and golf occasionally. His wife is also very active in the community, serving on the Board of the Philadelphia Art Alliance and working with the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Pennsylvania Ballet, and ad hoc projects for institutions such as the Philadelphia Boys Choir.

For both of them, it all revolves around that devotion to the City of Brotherly Love.

"There is little logical reason for our corporate offices really to be in Philadelphia any more except I'm here and I want to support this city," Rueda explained. "There's always this opportunity to pick out your area and say to yourself, 'I'm making a significant contribution. I'm paying back now.'"

Honor Roll of Donors

Dear Friends:

Once again, it is my great pleasure to thank La Salle's many benefactors for their continuing loyalty and support for the University.

The past year has certainly proved to be a very exciting one for La Salle and an exceptionally productive one for our development effort. The new Hayman Center is under construction, the Bucks County Center opened in September, the freshman class is our largest in close to a decade, and our fund-raising program has completed another successful campaign.

Among the many accomplishments detailed in this Honor Roll of Donors, the following are worthy of special mention:

• Total gifts, grants, and contracts to the University increased from $6,549,322 to $7,382,293, making 1997 our most successful year in the 1990s.

• Total Alumni/ae donations grew from $1,829,259 to $2,008,585, our second best year ever.

• The fifth annual Charter Dinner/La Salle University Leadership Award Ceremony honored Mr. G. Fred DiBona, Jr., President of Independence Blue Cross and Keystone Health Plan East, and raised more than $115,000 for the University's scholarship funds.

• Total contributions from parents of our undergraduates rose from $100,293 to $111,639, the best results we have ever achieved.

• The Annenberg Foundation completed its four-year pledge of $1 million to our capital campaign; The Ford Foundation and The William Penn Foundation awarded $500,000 and $82,500 respectively to our Nonprofit Management Development Center; and The Independence Foundation and The Connelly Foundation allocated $100,000 and $50,000 respectively to our Neighborhood Nursing Center.

• Total gifts, grants, and pledges to our capital campaign passed the $34 million mark.

As we move into 1998, all of us at La Salle are ever mindful of the debt that we owe to our many benefactors whose generosity has sustained and strengthened the University. At the same time, we clearly recognize that La Salle's future depends upon all of our graduates, parents, and friends doing whatever they can to maintain, and, wherever possible, enhance their financial support for our Annual Fund and for our special campaign for the Hayman Center. With everyone's help, La Salle will continue to prosper well into the next century.

Many thanks again for everything that you have done, and are continuing to do, for La Salle, its students, and its future.

Sincerely yours,

Brother Joe Burke

Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D.
President

HIGHLIGHTS

All gifts, grants, and contracts reported in the Honor Roll of Donors represent payments received by the University between July 1, 1996 and June 30, 1997. Multi-year pledges and contributions received after July 1, 1997 will be published in subsequent Honor Rolls as payments are received.

Every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the donor list. Occasionally, a donor's name is inadvertently misspelled or omitted. If, by chance, an error has been made, please accept our apology and notify us of the mistake at 215-951-1539.

Please use the inserted remittance envelope to send your gift to the University at your earliest convenience, to ensure that your name appears in the 1998 Honor Roll of Donors.

DR. JOSEPH F. PITTELLI TRUST

The Dr. Joseph F. Pittelli Trust has been formed to provide financial assistance to undergraduate students enrolled at La Salle University. The annual income from the trust will be distributed by the University's Financial Aid Office in amounts of $ 3,000 per recipient. Since the income will grow with the size of the trust, future students will benefit when La Salle graduates trade their stocks, bonds, and mutual funds through the discount firm represented by Dr. Pittelli. All of Dr. Pittelli's commissions will be donated to the trust. That is correct! When you make your investment through Dr. Pittelli, the discount commissions charged in your trade will go into the trust that bears his name. Dr. Pittelli is a registered representative with Stuart Stone and Co., located at 139 East McClellan Avenue, Livingston, NJ 07039.
Dr. Pittelli is now semi-retired, and he and his wife are senior citizens. They will continue to enjoy the trust's income while they are alive, and the remainder will pass to the University's after their deaths. Anyone interested in making investments through Dr. Pittelli should contact him at 609-427-9232. Those who may be interested in establishing similar trusts to benefit themselves and La Salle University should contact Fred J. Foley, Jr., Ph.D., Vice President for Development, at 215-951-1540.

ANNOUNCEMENT!
THE HONOR ROLL WILL BE CHANGING!

In an effort to provide expanded coverage for alumni events and campus news, beginning in 1998 the Honor Roll of Donors will only list the names of individual contributors in the Charter, University, Dr. Flubacher, San Miguel, President's, Founder's, Ugo Donini, and Anniversary Clubs. La Salle thanks all of its donors and deeply appreciates their loyalty and support for the University.

"HI, I'M CALLING FOR LA SALLE UNIVERSITY . . ."

by Thomas J. Lynch '62, Volunteer Alumni Annual Fund Chair

"La Salle calling again!"

Have you found yourself saying that about telephone calls from friends of La Salle lately?

I admit that our telephone outreach campaign programs have increased in the past year, but allow me the opportunity to explain why.

There are so many good things happening at La Salle today. The Hayman Center is under construction, the Bucks County Center opened in September, the freshman class is our largest in close to a decade, and our academic reputation has grown dramatically through the accreditation of our Schools of Business Administration and Nursing.

Some of these developments are extraordinary and require funding that is beyond our annual operating budget—in particular, the Hayman Center expansion and renovation project. Others — most notably the financial aid that enables our students to afford a La Salle education — directly depend upon our annual appeal which seeks donations to help bridge the gap between what the students pay and what their education actually costs. Unfortunately, tuition and fees do not cover the full cost of a La Salle education.

Yes, we have a great university. I wish I could visit each of you personally to tell you exactly what's happening on campus. I'd like to talk to you about the old times at La Salle College, and, now, especially about the new times.

In addition to enhancing the value of a La Salle education or helping to fund a special project on campus, why should you support La Salle University – your alma mater, your children's alma mater?

- All of us benefited from similar generosity for buildings, equipment and tuition aid.
- Your degree reflects our strong academic reputation; to keep up with technology, teaching standards and quality education, we need your help.
- Alumni and parent support helps us maintain an excellent faculty and student-teacher ratio.
- Your donations help meet academic needs such as financial assistance, scholarships and lab equipment. They help us to offer extracurricular activities which enhance the educational experience.
- Many corporations and foundations look to the number of alumni and parent donors as a standard for choosing their level of support to the university. Your gift generates many more!

So, why do we call you to ask for your support?

When we write asking for your support, we follow-up with a telephone call because a letter simply does not build the personal kind of relationship we wish we could have with you. In order to communicate our goals and mission more fully, we prefer to reach as many of you as we can by phoning.

Why do we use outside telemarketing companies?

La Salle alumni and parents are numerous and widespread—some 50,000 in all 50 states and abroad. So, in addition to our alumni, student and parent volunteers, we enlist the assistance of telemarketing companies to reach as many folks as possible. Over four months, encountering changed area codes, new phone numbers and answering machines, our telemarketers work diligently to connect with the La Salle family. Since 1989, professional callers have helped the Annual Fund increase by over 60%! I understand that a call in the evening can seem like an untimely interruption, but please remember, all these people are trying to help La Salle. We assist all volunteers and telemarketers in their training and monitor their efforts closely. If you should encounter a less than perfect call, please let us know by calling the Development Office at (215) 951-1540 so that we can take corrective action.

As graduates and/or parents, you have a stake in La Salle University. We are striving to strengthen our reputation for educational excellence for today and tomorrow. We cannot do that without your support. I hope you share in my enthusiasm for La Salle. Your support has been and continues to be vital to our success!

Déjà vu for La Salle's New Alumni Association President

As the newly-elected president of La Salle's 40,000 member Alumni Association, one of Nick Lisi's primary responsibilities will be to generate interest and enthusiasm for the university.

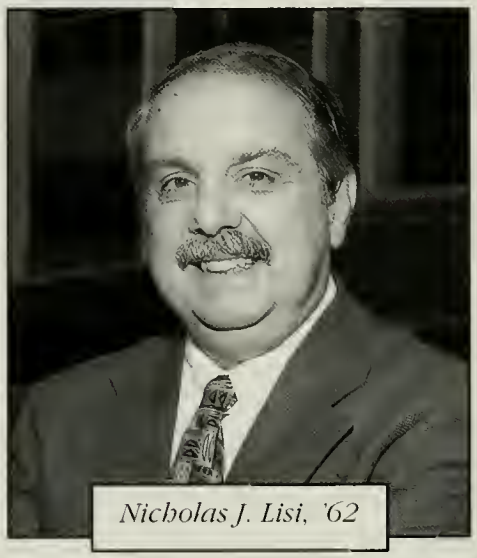
Which is exactly what he started doing almost 40 years ago.

Today, Nicholas J. Lisi, '62, is owner/partner of his Philadelphia law firm, Padova and Lisi. But back in the late 1950s, he was one of the undergraduates who helped form the Committee of Explorers—later to become the Sigma Phi Lambda Fraternity—which pumped up spirit for La Salle's basketball team by preparing the rollouts and skits that became part of the legend and lore of the Palestra, and organized the traditional Tap-Off Rally parade. He also served on Student Council and was elected president of Residence Council.

"I truly love La Salle, the school was very good to me," says Lisi, who declined earlier opportunities to run for Alumni Association president because of professional and family responsibilities."I just want to give back a little. I made a lot of friends there. Not only the people I went to college with but many of the professors and people from The Alumni Association."

Lisi was active in the association for a while after graduating from Boston College Law School, then became active again a few years ago and rapidly moved up the ladder on the Alumni Board as treasurer, vice president, and executive VP. As treasurer he helped promote the affinity card program and pushed for a more aggressive investment policy which has helped not only to improve the treasury but increase the amount generated each year by the Alumni Scholarship Fund.

He says that his main priority is to build on the solid performances of his predecessors and make the Alumni Association a stronger entity on campus. "I think there's been a tendency for us to do only what we had routinely done in the past," he explained. "And I think that we have to do more than that. There has to be a broadening of what we're doing. All of the past presidents—people like Joe Cloran, Maria Cusick, Marianne Gauss, and Steve McGonigle—have been excellent leaders and have brought the quality of the association up another level. It's not like I have to create something entirely. But the programs that we sponsor are the ones that we have done for years. I think the traditional activities can run by themselves now. We have to start moving into some additional areas."



Nicholas J. Lisi, '62

Lisi also wants a more active Alumni Board. "I have a philosophy that if you belong to an organization, you're active in it," he explained. "We have too many people on the board who are members in name only. They don't even come to meetings. I think because of that, other alumni view the association as something like a toothless tiger."

Lisi would also like to see the members elected to Alumni Board. "Now, it's primarily by invitation. The only people elected are three members from each graduating class. At other schools where elections are held for the board, people are eager to run for these offices."

Other priorities include strengthening the geographic chapters and clubs—South Jersey, for example, where thousands of graduates reside—and some of the professional societies. "Then once we have the structure, we have to find a way of communicating with all those groups," said Lisi, "so that they can be more involved with the association. Also, our association must be more involved in campus activities and, to some extent, with decisions that affect the university."

Finally, Lisi said that he would like to find ways for the association to raise more money in order to increase its contribution to the Alumni Scholarship Fund.

When his two-year term as president is over, Lisi says that he does not want to be remembered for any particular one thing that he did. "I'd like people to say, 'he worked hard and did a good job and the Alumni Association moved forward.' The core of what I want to do is make the association stronger and really recognized at La Salle as an organization which is making a significant contribution to the school."

In order to achieve this, Lisi would like to see the university devote more time, effort, and money for alumni relations. "I realize that the school has financial limitations as to what it can do, but I've had the feeling for many years that the university has never really made the best use of the Alumni Office. They never staffed it with enough people. For years when I was on fund-raising (telethons), I would call people and they would say, 'The only time I hear from La Salle is when they want money.' And you still hear that refrain now. Jim McDonald, our former director, and our current director Bud Dotsey and their staffs are dedicated and have done a great job. I don't know how they've accomplished so much with so few people. If La Salle wants our alumni to be good to the institution, the university should be in touch with them more often."

Lisi says that Brother President Joseph Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, who, incidentally is the first alumnus to head the university, told members of the Alumni Long-Range Planning Committee last year that he is 'very receptive to having a strong Alumni Association.'

Lisi's law firm, which includes former Explorer basketball captain Bob McAteer, '62, primarily handles litigation including commercial, personal, injury, professional negligence, and criminal defense.

A pre-law major and a native of Vineland, N.J., Lisi decided to become an attorney during his sophomore year. "My father (Dominick) was very encouraging and a big influence," he recalls. "He had wanted to become attorney but couldn't because of the Depression. He would have made a super lawyer because not only was he very bright, but he was good on his feet and great with people." After Law School, Lisi practiced in New Jersey until moving to Philadelphia in 1972.

In addition to serving on the Board of Governors of the Philadelphia Bar Association for three years, Lisi has been a member of the Judicial Selection Retention Commission that rates the performances of judicial candidates and judges who are seeking re-election in Philadelphia. He is also a former officer and chancellor of the Justinian Society, the Italian-American Bar Association.

Lisi and his wife, Marie Elena, live in Drexel Hill, Pa. They have three grown children: (Mrs.) Kristin Conway, who is finishing her doctorate in neuropsychology; Michael, an attorney who is clerking in the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia, and Mark, who recently earned a master's degree in audiology. In his spare time, Nick enjoys gardening, golf, and relaxing on the beach at the Jersey shore.
